CAVALRY.

1st Life Guards.—Lieut.-Col. Miles leaves England to-day in the Kildonan Castle for South Africa to assume command of the Composite Regiment, vice Lieut.-Col. Neeld, invalided. Better accounts are being received of Lord Derby's son, 2nd Lieut. Stanley, who has been lying for some weeks dangerously ill at Wynberg. He has made a turn for the better, and is now thought to be out of danger. He will be sent home directly he can be moved.

2nd Life Guards.—Lieut.-Col. Neeld, having been invalided, vacates command of the Composite Regiment in South Africa. Capt. Lord Kensington is stated to be making satisfactory progress towards recovery from the dangerous wound he received in action. Capt. Peel, who died at Bloemfontein on the 16th ult., aged 36 years, and whose estate has been valued at £34,718 7s. gross, including personality of the net value of £23,877 9s., bequeathed to Capt. Berkeley Thomas Levett, Scots Guards, £3,000; to his servant, Samuel Norman, £200; and, in the event of the death of his servant in action or from disease in South Africa within two years, an allowance of £1 a week to his widow for ten years. Capt. Peel bequeathed £1,000, in trust, to apply the income thereof to defray the necessary expenses incurred by a trooper when promoted to a lance-corporal, the amount to be paid to be in the discretion of the trustees. He bequeathed to each corporal-major in squadron £25. Capt. Peel left the residue of his property to his brother, Mr. H. H. Peel, 19, Victoria Place, Eastbourne, who is executor of the will, power being reserved to grant probate to the Earl of Longford. Lieut. Sir George Prescott is en route to South Africa in the Mahratta, which left Queenstown on the 11th inst.

3rd Hussars.—Lieut. Madden left Cape Town on the 15th inst. for England in the American, invalided.

4th Hussars.—Capt. Graham comes home on six months' leave from India on medical certificate.

5th Lancers.—A brass memorial plate is to be placed in the wall of Wilton Parish Church, near Hawick, in memory of the late Col. Scott Chisholm, of Stirches, who fell at Elands Laagte. The Chisholm family is one of the oldest in the Hawick district.

9th Lancers.—Lieut. Brooke left Cape Town on the 15th inst. for England in the American, invalided. 2nd Lieut. Thorold, who was previously reported killed, is a prisoner at Pretoria.

12th Lancers.—Lieut.-Col. Lord Airlie was more seriously wounded than at first supposed. It has now been reported that his wound was severe, but by last accounts he was doing well, and it was thought would be able to return to duty.

18th Hussars.—2nd Lieut. Cawston left Cape Town on the 12th inst. in the American for England, invalided.

20th Hussars.—Lieut. Dunbar has been appointed A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Sir R. Westmacott, commanding the Mhow District.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

The 134th and 135th Batteries R.F.A. were taken on to the establishment from the 21st inst., and are in course of formation at Sheffield.

Lieut.-Col. J. McDonnell and Capt. R. F. Ruck-Keene, R.F.A., sailed from Cape Town for England on the 12th inst. in the American, and Capt. W. P. Monkhouse and A. F. Becke on the 15th inst. in the Orient.

Major J. S. Frith, R.G.A., has been appointed Acting D.A.A.G., Southern District.

Capt. H. E. Vallentin, R.H.A., has been appointed Acting A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Maurice, K.C.B., at Woolwich.

Capt. E. D. Cameron, R.F.A., has resigned his appointment as Acting D.A.A.G., South Eastern District.

At the annual Court meeting of the Royal Humane Society the Stanhope gold medal was awarded unanimously to Gunner W. Hall, his case being in the opinion of the committee the most deserving of the year. It will be remembered that at 3.40 p.m. on Dec. 28, 1898, a man named Carrington Franklin was at work in an electro-plating establishment in an upstairs room at 42, Clerkenwell Close, Clerkenwell, when he was visited by his wife and three children, aged respectively ten, four, and two years. On the floor were various vessels containing chemicals used in the business, and it is supposed that the children in their play upset two basins containing cyanide of potassium and vitriol. Fumes of prussic acid were at once generated and filled the room, rendering Franklin and the children unconscious. Mrs. Franklin managed to escape and called for help. Gunner Hall, who was on furlough, happened to be passing, and on being told what had occurred he, without hesitation, stuffed his handkerchief into his mouth, and rushing in found the eldest boy near the bottom of the stairs and carried him out. He then made three journeys up the stairs and into the room where the others lay, bringing out first the children and last of all the father. From inhaling the fumes he was now so exhausted that he fell with Franklin at the foot of the stairs, and was assisted out by his brother, who had come on the scene. When outside he became unconscious, but soon recovered. Extreme risk was incurred, and without doubt all four persons would have lost their lives but for his prompt action and presence of mind.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Lieut.-Col. C. K. Wood is appointed Chief Engineer Natal Field Force, with the rank of Colonel. Lieut.-Col. H. D. Olivier is about to retire.

INFANTRY.

Grenadier Guards.—The Queen made an informal inspection at the Victoria Barracks, Windsor, on Monday, of the 200 Reservists, who left England on Wednesday, under command of Capt. White, for South Africa. Her Majesty drove on to the parade ground in an open carriage with Princess Henry of Battenberg. The men having marched past in fours, formed up in quarter column and gave three cheers. The officers of the detachment having been presented by Lieut.-Col. Kinloch, the Queen addressing the troops said:—"I have come here to-day to bid you all God-speed. I wish you every success on the long journey on which you are going, and I hope to see you back again at no distant date. I am sure you will do your duty, as it has been done by those who have gone out before you." Col. Kinloch replied: "May it please your Majesty, I have the honour to thank your Majesty for your gracious words. With respect to the men who are now going to the front, I can only say they are animated by the same spirit of duty and devotion which has characterised their comrades who are already in South Africa." The band then played the National Anthem, and the men again gave three cheers for the Queen as her Majesty left the parade ground. Capt. Hervey-Bathurst, 3rd Batn., who is in hospital at Kimberley, has succeeded to a baronetcy by the death of his father, Lieut.-Col. Sir Frederick Hervey-Bathurst, who served with the regiment in the Crimea.

Scots Guards.—The Duke of Connaught, as Colonel of the regiment, who was accompanied by the Prince of Wales, inspected the newly-formed 3rd Batn. at Wellington Barracks on Tuesday, and also saw the Reservist drafts from the Coldstream Guards and the Scots Guards which are going out to reinforce the battalions of their respective regiments now with Lord Roberts. The Reservists wore their khaki uniforms. The Duke of Connaught drove to the barracks in an open carriage, in which were also the Duchess of Connaught and the Princesses Victoria and Margaret Patricia of Connaught. Lieut.-Col. Dalrymple-Hamilton was in command of the battalion. Major Harbord was in command of the Scots Guards and Capt. Fremantle of the Coldstream Guards' draft. The Duke of Connaught wore the undress uniform of the regiment. The Prince of Wales was in undress general's uniform. He was accompanied by the Princess of Wales and Princess Victoria of Wales. The line having been inspected the troops formed fours, and marched past in that formation. Three sides of a square were formed and the officers called to the front. The Duke of Connaught said:—

"Officers, non-commissioned officers, and men.—It gives me great pleasure to come here to inspect you this morning, and wish you God speed on your departure to South Africa. You are going out to join battalions of the Guards which have nobly upheld the name of the British Army and the traditions of her Majesty's Guards. I am certain that every man I am addressing at this moment will do his utmost to be a fine reinforcement for those battalions which have been working so hard in South Africa. I do not need to give you any advice: you do not need any. You know your duty, and you love the Guards to which you belong. I am commanded on this occasion by her Majesty the Queen to wish you a good and safe passage, a successful campaign, and a speedy and happy return. Her Majesty regrets she has not been able to see you personally on this occasion as she did the Grenadiers at Windsor yesterday, but it is a great satisfaction that my brother, the Prince of Wales, has come here to see you before you start. You know the interest he takes in you all. This is the first time I have had the pleasure of seeing representatives of the 3rd Scots Guards, and I think it is a very great thing on this occasion to be commanded by an officer whose empty sleeve tells you what he has been through in South Africa. I saw him leave six months ago with the 1st Batn. Officers, non-commissioned officers and men, who are going to the front, I again wish you God-speed, a safe voyage, a successful campaign, and a speedy return home."

The Duke then saluted the Prince, and the officers were presented by Major-Gen. Trotter. Hearty cheers were afterwards given by the men for the Queen and for the Duke of Connaught. A royal salute was given as the Prince and the Duke of Connaught drove away.

Northumberland Fusiliers (5th).—Details were moved on Monday from York to Strensall.

Royal Warwickshire Regiment (6th).—Lieut. Harvey, 2nd Batn., sailed from Cape Town for England in the American on the 12th inst., invalided.

Norfolk Regiment (9th).—2nd Lieut. Lyon, 2nd Batn., sailed from Cape Town for England on the 12th inst. in the Orient, invalided.

Somersetshire Light Infantry (13th).—Details have arrived at Devonport from Portland.

West Yorkshire Regiment (14th).—2nd Lieut. Ross, 2nd Batn., sailed from Cape Town for England in the Orient on the 15th inst., invalided.

Bedfordshire Regiment (16th).—Lieut. Wetherall, 2nd Batn., sailed from Cape Town for England in the American on the 12th inst., invalided.

Lancashire Fusiliers (20th).—Messrs. Corrigan and Wilson, Upper Sackville Street, Dublin, have just produced for the regiment the ninth issue of that interesting and valuable publication, the "Lancashire Fusilier's Annual." We have had occasion in previous years to refer to the excellence of this work. The issue for 1899 seems to have been prepared with more care even than usual. From first to last its pages are most readable, and we must congratulate all battalions of this distinguished regiment upon the possession of such a record of events, which cannot fail to do immense good in fostering esprit de corps and promoting that harmony which should exist between the several units of a territorial regiment. A meed of praise is due to the editor. He has performed his duties most efficiently—this the pages show. It is too much to expect perhaps that all regiments will be able to follow the example of the Lancashire Fusiliers in establishing annuals. If they could it would be a great thing for the Army. The volume before us is worthy of the corps which still perpetuates, and with such good reason, the glories of Minden.

South Wales Borderers (24th).—Lieut.-Col. Mainwaring has been granted an extension of his command of the 1st Batn. for twelve months from June 9.

Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers (27th).—In the House of Commons the other day, Mr. MacNeill asked the Under Secretary for War whether he was aware that the regiment was 1,135 strong when it left Queenstown on Nov. 5 for the seat of war, and that on Feb. 24, after the final crossing of the Tugela, only 25 men and one officer answered to their names. And whether he could explain why, although Col. Thackeray sent forward to Sir Redvers Buller the names of several men of the Inniskillings who were in his judgment entitled to special commendation, there had been no mention either of these men or of the conduct of the regiment in any published despatches. Mr. Wyndham said the losses among the officers, though heavy, were not so heavy as the hon. member had been led to believe. At Colenso there was one killed and nine wounded, of whom one has since died. On Feb. 23-24, there were three killed, seven wounded, and one missing. The high honour of a mention in despatches rests with the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa. Beyond that I have nothing to say in reply to the second paragraph. Mr. MacNeill desired to enter into a discussion with Mr. Wyndham; but he refused to allow himself to be drawn. Major Davidson is making good progress towards recovery from the wounds received in action at Pieter's Hill. He has derived great benefit from the voyage home, and has been greatly impressed by the reception he received on his arrival at his home, Eglington, co. Derry. All ranks of the Inniskillings will wish this popular officer a speedy restoration to health and return to duty.

Worcestershire Regiment (29th).—Lieut. and Qrmr. Ryder, 4th Batn., is en route from the Cape in the American, which sailed for Southampton on the 12th inst.

Black Watch (42nd).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. is now in camp at Barry Links, it having been moved there from Montrose.

Oxfordshire Light Infantry (43rd).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn., under command of Lieut.-Col. Earl of Orkney, is now encamped at Kilworth, having moved there from Buttevant.

Sherwood Foresters (45th).—Details will be moved on Monday next from Shorncliffe to Aldershot.

Shropshire Light Infantry (53rd).—The 4th (Militia) Batn., is now encamped at Kilworth, having been moved there from Tipperary, where the 3rd (Militia) Batn. has relieved it on embodiment.

King's Royal Rifles (60th).—Capt. Clark, 4th Batn., who has been Acting D.A.A.G., Portsmouth, since January last, has embarked for South Africa.

Gloucestershire Regiment (61st).—Lieut. Ruck left Cape Town for England in the Orient on the 15th inst., invalided.

Wiltshire Regiment (62nd).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. is now in camp at Kilworth, having arrived there from Fermanagh.

York and Lancaster Regiment (65th).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. is now encamped at Finner, Ballyshannon, having arrived there from Newry. Details of the 1st Batn. moved with the 3rd Batn., to which they are attached. Lieut. Gardner has left Cape Town for England in the Orient, invalided.

Durham Light Infantry (68th).—Lieut. and Qrmer. Byrne is on passage home from South Africa in the American, which sailed on the 12th inst.

East Surrey Regiment (70th).—Details have arrived at Finner Camp, Ballyshannon, from Holywoods. Capt. Packman sailed from Cape Town for England on the 15th inst. in the Orient, invalided.

Seaford Highlanders (72nd).—Capt. Thomson sailed from Alexandria on the 14th inst. for Gibraltar in charge of a draft of 100 men for transfer to the 2nd Batn. in South Africa. At Gibraltar the party went on board the Manchester Merchant for conveyance to Cape Town.

Gordon Highlanders (75th).—Capt. Murray has recovered from the severe wound he received lately in action, and has returned to duty with his battalion.

Scottish Rifles (90th).—Details are now encamped at Lanark Muir, near Lanark, having been moved there recently from Glasgow.

Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders (91st).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. is at Finner Camp, Ballyshannon, having arrived there from Dublin. Details moved with the battalion.

Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders (93rd).—Major Grant has passed the examination qualifying for promotion to the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel.

Wiltshire Regiment (99th).—Capt. Macdonald, having completed his term of appointment as Adjutant of the 17th (North) Middlesex Rifle Volunteers, proceeds to South Africa to join this battalion.

Royal Dublin Fusiliers (103rd).—Lieut. Britton left Cape Town for England on the 15th inst. in the Orient, invalided.

Army Service Corps.—Capt. Black is on passage home from Cape Town in the Orient, which sailed on the 15th inst.

Royal Army Medical Corps.—Lieut. and Qrmer. Dear sailed from Cape Town on the 12th inst. for England in the American, invalided.

Army Veterinary Department.—The Secretary of State has sanctioned the strengthening of the Imperial branch of the Civil Veterinary Department by three officers to be employed in connection with the prevention of cattle disease. One of them is allotted to the Punjab and one to Burma, while the third will officiate for officers in the same line proceeding on leave. Transfers from Army Veterinary Department having been stopped, these and other officers required from the Civil Veterinary Department will probably be appointed direct from various veterinary institutions in England.

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER AND THE WAR OFFICE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I note that in your article of the 19th inst., you make two statements relating to myself. You say:—

1. In a very long article in the Fortnightly Review last month Mr. Arnold-Forster formulates at great length "an indictment against the War Office."

2. What he (Mr. Arnold-Forster) wants is to turn out Lord Lansdowne, and put Sir Michael Hicks-Beach in his place.

May I make a slight correction as follows:—

1. I have written no article for the Fortnightly Review.

2. I have never in my wildest moments suggested either in the Fortnightly Review or anywhere else, that Sir Michael Hicks-Beach should replace Lord Lansdowne.

I am sure you will do me the justice of inserting this letter.

Reviews.

1815—WATERLOO.

Under this title is published a translation of M. Henry Houssaye's now famous book upon the campaign of Waterloo. The translation has been made from the 31st French edition by Arthur Emile Mann, and edited by A. Euan-Smith (A. and C. Black). The appearance of the volume in England is particularly welcome, for the battle of Waterloo will never cease to interest all military and historical students. The translation is well done and reads pleasantly, though there are occasional slips, and it is odd to read in a book published in England of "Marshal Wolseley," and the reference to the Emperor's order that Reille should "advance by degrees to keep at the same height as Count d'Erlon," should surely have had a better English form. These, however, are but slight blemishes in a volume that is wholly acceptable. In the course of his inquiry M. Houssaye has found it necessary to traverse the views of many critics, but he never fails to give what appears to be good evidence for his opinions, and at the very least his judgments upon events command respect. He writes, of course, from the French point of view. Napoleon and his marshals were in the prime of life, and the army was full of extraordinary enthusiasm, of eagerness to fight, resolution to conquer, idolatry of the Emperor and hatred of foreigners. But the marshals had lost confidence in the triumph of their cause. The feeling that prevailed was expressed by Gen. Ruty, commanding the artillery, on June 10, when the Emperor passed through La Fère. "Bonaparte is doomed without greater resources; the king will return before long; what is to become of us?—this miserable army that did not want to fire a shot three months ago!" Discord reigned in the staff, rivalry among the various corps, and lack of discipline throughout the forces. M. Houssaye's account of Napoleon's plans is extremely interesting. He would have liked to mass a great force round Paris, and so to dispose his other troops as to compel the enemy to fight within a network of great military strongholds; but he had to count with public opinion and to make an impression, and he adopted the brilliant plan which M. Houssaye describes. To attack either the English or the Prussians separately and directly would have driven them to unite, but, "inspired by one of his finest strategical conceptions, the Emperor resolved to break boldly into the very centre of the enemy's cantonments, at the very point where the English and Prussians would probably concentrate." This is the idea that informs M. Houssaye's pages, and it will be seen that he differs in this from some previous writers. The great plan failed owing to defects of execution, some attributed to the Emperor, but a far larger number to his lieutenants—D'Erlon, Gérard, Vandamme, Grouchy, and Ney most of all. These men seem to have lost faith in the Napoleonic star. Yet, notwithstanding Ney's mistakes, nothing was compromised on June 16, and "Général Impérial" intervened in favour of Napoleon, giving to him the opportunity of defeating the Prussians at Ligny. He might bring the campaign to an end, as he thought, by a single blow, and M. Houssaye is at pains to show the want of understanding of Napoleon's methods in the contention of Müffling, Rogiat, and others, that he should only have made a demonstration. The attempt to annihilate Blücher failed through an extraordinary combination of errors on the part of the marshals, and chiefly through the indecision of D'Erlon, who completely neutralised his troops by marching them about from wing to wing on that critical afternoon. Although Ney's desperate act in recalling D'Erlon was anticipated in its evil effect, M. Houssaye ascribes to him the principal responsibility for the incomplete results, and in thus fastening the blame upon him, he differs entirely from Clausewitz and Charras, and cites in support of his opinion the arguments of many writers, and finally of Lord Wolseley. Napoleon's great mistake was in not attacking earlier at Quatre Bras, where the French critic thinks he might have exterminated our force, but he hesitated, and delayed too long. It has been said that he was ill, but this view is not taken by M. Houssaye, who thus differs entirely from Lord Wolseley. If Napoleon was ill, he says, it certainly did not affect his physical or intellectual vigour, "but with him, his moral power no longer upheld his genius." In relation to the important operation confided to Grouchy, M. Houssaye remarks that he acted blindly, but that Napoleon did nothing to enlighten him. But he argues that, if the action on June 18 had begun as early as Napoleon intended, neither Grouchy's great strategic blunder, nor the mistake of the Emperor in neglecting to repeat his orders, would have prevented Wellington from being defeated before the Prussians could arrive. Here, of course, the French critic is arguing from disputed premises, and it is probable that his view will not meet wide acceptance in England. He dwells at great length upon the many blunders made by the French; the demonstration against Hougomont developed madly into a headlong attack, in which half the second corps was uselessly sacrificed, the clumsy formation of D'Erlon's corps, which was the virtual cause of its confusion and of the ruin to which our cavalry charges brought it, the neglect of Reille to carry out the Emperor's commands, and the mismanagement of Ney, who had 30,000 bayonets under his orders, and yet made ineffectual assaults upon La Haye Sainte, and failed to understand the importance of that position. Nevertheless, throughout all the errors, M. Houssaye traces the development of the Emperor's plan, and he concludes by the remark that Napoleon's command was never more efficient nor his action more direct. But, in repairing the omissions and blunders of his lieutenants, he was compelled to play the part of the sergent de bataille, and when he saw all his combinations prove abortive, his attacks failing, his generals frittering away his troops, his last army melting through his hands, and his adversaries dictating the course of events, "he lost his resolution with his confidence, hesitated, limited himself to providing against the more pressing dangers, waited for the lucky moment, let it pass, and did not dare in time to risk all in order to save all." One-third of the volume is occupied with voluminous notes and references to authorities, but it is a very great pity that it was not completed by giving it, what it greatly needs, a good index.

The War to Date (March 1, 1900), by Arthur H. Scaife (Fisher Unwin), is a book written for and dedicated to "the man in the street," not with the idea of adding to that mysterious gentleman's knowledge, but merely of assisting his memory. It appears, therefore, to be written for absent-minded beggars, who are not quite at home when they talk about the "Great Trek," or "Dingaan's Day," or the "Sand River Convention," or sundry other circumstances of Boer history, and of our dealings with them. We did not read far without discovering that Mr. Scaife has great sympathy with the Boers, and not much with the financiers. President Kruger is also much in his favour though, "uncouth, ungainly, and not over clean." For the rest we may say that Mr. Scaife has read intelligently and compiled diligently, and that his chronicle may be useful, though there are points in which it might have been improved.

Messrs. W. and A. K. Johnston have issued a most timely plan of the Great Exhibition remarkably well defined and informing. On the same sheet they have printed a map of Paris, and another map of France complete, and all three are executed in excellent style, and are distinguished by the clearness and precision of the letterpress.

1815.—WATERLOO.

The Waterloo Campaign from a French Point of View. By HENRY HOUSSAYE, Member of the French Academy. Translated by E. A. Mann, and edited by Agnes Euan-Smith. Containing 3 plans of the District and Scene of the Battle.

"M. Houssaye's description of the marshalling of Napoleon's army at Waterloo is very fine, as is also his graphic account of its pursuit and slaughter by the Prussians, after it had been beaten by the British."—DAILY CHRONICLE.

"The conditions under which the final struggle with Napoleon was commenced; the developments of the battle itself; the plans of campaign on both sides, and the modifications rendered inevitable by the unforeseen, are passed in masterly review."—SATURDAY REVIEW.

"He has endeavoured to present a detailed and faithful account of what took place, to deduce conclusions from well-authenticated facts, rather than to make facts fit in with preconceived notions, to produce, in other words, an essentially objective work. The way in which he has prepared himself for his task, and sets about it, is calculated to inspire confidence."—GLASGOW HERALD.

Mr. H. W. WILSON, in the PALL MALL GAZETTE, says: "Those who have studied M. Henry Houssaye's two earlier works describing the decline and fall of the Napoleonic Empire, have looked eagerly for the second volume of '1815,' where the Waterloo Campaign is the writer's theme. For M. Houssaye combines in a remarkable degree the great qualities of the historian. To accuracy and impartiality he adds picturesqueness and vigour of style. Never has he done anything better than the present work. It will hereafter displace even Mr. Ropes' careful and well-reasoned study of the campaign which gave peace to Europe for a generation and finally destroyed Napoleon's power."

Army & Navy Gazette.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 26, 1900.

NO HONOURS FOR THE NAVY.

"THANK God!" exclaimed a distinguished admiral in the "Senior" on Wednesday, "they've left the Navy out altogether this time; now, perhaps, some notice will be taken of the matter." We hope that the pious aspiration of this officer may be realised, but we much doubt whether even the circumstance that he refers to will have the effect he desires, particularly as the same thing happened two years ago. The Admiralty, too, played their game cleverly by producing a little budget of promotions on the previous day, with the result that in at least one influential quarter, when attention was drawn to the omission of the Navy from the Birthday Gazette, the reply was "Oh, they got their honours the day before." Nothing, of course, is farther from the truth, but the trick served its purpose, or will do so unless the Service shows itself to be less apathetic than usual. Truth to tell, there is something almost machine-like in the Birthday list of honours. The same classes of men are represented in it year after year, until one longs for a touch of imagination if only for a change. It is only as usual that the Navy is left out in the cold. After the enthusiasm of a fortnight since this is more noticeable than at any time in the last fifty years, especially as the Army is by no means forgotten. The principle on which the senior Service is thus neglected, has yet to be made public, but it is the same, no doubt, that led to the cold shouldering of the Colonies at the beginning of the present war. The fact remains the same—that the list of Birthday honours may be searched in vain for the name of a single naval officer. When the powers that be are showering honours right and left, the basis of our strength, our most trustworthy means of maintaining the greatest Empire in the world on the cheap, is quietly ignored. The truth of the matter is that the Navy still preserves the traditions of a better and a nobler time. Its superb efficiency speaks in the work it has so quietly done all over the globe. But it will not advertise, and, in an age of advertisement, modesty receives scant recognition. Thus it is with the Navy, and it is little short of a public scandal if naval officers receive honour only when the world is ringing with their praises as at Ladysmith.

Whether any explanation is attempted or not, the discredit to the Admiralty remains the same. We may be told, as on previous occasions, that, as there were no vacancies, no promotions or appointments in the Bath could be made. But if the establishment of the Order in connection with the Service is insufficient and inadequate, the remedy is obvious: it has been revised before, and it must be again. The same excuse cannot hold good in the case of those decorations connected with the Colonies and with India, and of which by no means a fair proportion is allotted to the Navy. Why should our seamen be shut out from participation in these honours when they are so largely instrumental in maintaining and stimulating the sentiments and ties which bind the Empire together? Even as regards the promotions awarded in connection with the operations in South Africa there is a shabbiness of treatment which does not redound to the credit of the Admiralty, and that some of the members of the Board are of this opinion is shown by the notice which was issued on the following day. We append it in the form in which it was received:—

(For publication in to-morrow's issue.)

"With reference to the list of promotions in the Navy which appeared in the Gazette last night, we understand that only the cases of officers who have left South Africa have so far been dealt with. The services of those who remain on the station will be considered like those of officers of the Army at the end of the war.

"Admiralty,
"May 22, 1900."

The disingenuousness of this document is equalled by its inaccuracy. It would be interesting to learn the actual cause of the issue of this misleading information. Was it that the officers of the Terrible should be discouraged from pressing their claims, or was it by way of excuse in connection with the service of those naval and marine officers, whose gallantry both in the Ladysmith and Kimberley relief columns has been so conspicuous? If we assume the latter to be correct, then why announce the promotion of Lieutenant Dean; and if the former, are we to suppose that no other officer of the Terrible is to receive reward? Not to be invidious, let us take, for example, the midshipmen, who were serving under Sir Redvers Buller. Why should they not be treated on similar lines to their brother youngsters who were in Ladysmith? Surely the difference in the labours and the hardships and the perils of those inside and those out was not so great as to warrant such entirely different treatment. And as with these boys, so with their seniors. It is at least odd, also, that out of the eighteen officers with the brigade under Sir George White the name of one only is omitted in the list gazetted this week. It should not be forgotten that in taking the present course the Admiralty is departing from precedent; and history tells us how in the case of the Russian War the Navy fared when it waited for its rewards until after the proclamation of peace.

AMERICA AND THE POWERS.

CONTINENTAL nations are watching with much curiosity, and not a little alarm, the "imperialistic" enterprise of the United States. The Russian Listok remarks that the tendencies of the United States in matters of foreign policy may be characterised by the same term as British "imperialism," being the necessity for finding scope for the development of trade and the exertion of energy. The Listok is writing in relation to the conflict of views which has arisen between the Porte and the United States, and the rumour of an intention on the part of America to make a naval demonstration before Constantinople. We do not believe that the quarrel will lead to any such event, but the Russian papers are not slow in announcing that the St. Petersburg Government would be the first to take offence. The Russians regard the interference of the United States between Spain and Cuba, and the annexation of the Philippines as entirely due to this new "imperialism," which they cannot reconcile with the Monroe doctrine. America for the Americans may be all very well, but what has that, they say, to do with the Bosphorus or the Philippines?

It would be idle to deny that the injudicious utterances of American politicians have led to some angry feeling. Mr. Lodge is a leading member of the Senate Committee of Foreign Relations, but he did not hesitate to draw a Chauvinistic picture of international affairs. He gave a note of alarm in regard to the Nicaragua Canal, announced that a large fleet was necessary to defend the Monroe doctrine, and publicly declared that he was by no means convinced that Germany might not test that doctrine, and cause the United States to stand forth as the defenders of Brazil or some other South American State. He would not permit any European nation, and of course Germany is in his mind's eye, to lay hands on the Danish West Indies, announcing that the possessor of those islands would necessarily be the enemy of the United States. "We could submit to no such thing as that." The singular utterances of Senator Lodge found their reply in the congratulatory telegram of the German Emperor to Senhor Campos Salles, the Brazilian President, and in the declaration of Senator Hale, Chairman of the Naval Committee, that he did not believe the American Government to be faced by any great need of an increase of the navy because of any apprehension of hostilities, either now or in the future with Germany.

The truth is that the phases of American policy are at the present time entirely ruled by the coming presidential election. Out of that, as the Boer delegates have discovered, comes the sympathy for the Boers, and, as one witty politician remarks, the agitators are not wishful to help the Boers; they want the Boers to help them. The most serious expression of American antipathy to this country is found in the passage of the Hepburn Bill through the House of Representatives by a large majority, and the position of the American cabinet is undoubtedly compromised. Many controversies had arisen out of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and the American Secretary of State and the British Foreign Office had arrived at an agreement which was to put an end to them. Through an exaggerated interpretation of the Monroe doctrine, the House rejected the Hay-Pauncefote agreement concerning the Nicaragua Canal. Nothing was to be done in regard to the construction of the canal without the co-operation of this country, and the President and his advisers approved the arrangement. The Bill which goes before the Senate would make it possible, if it were accepted as an article of international agreement, for the United States to make the canal without consulting anybody. Happily, much water will run under the bridges, and perhaps even the Presidential election will have taken place, before that great engineering work can be put in hand. The Senate is notoriously slow in its operations, and time may be given for wiser counsels than those which at present prevail. We have confidence, indeed, that the good sense of the people of the United States will not urge them to an extreme which would produce friction between the United States and this country. As the New York Times has written of a notorious American pro-Boer, "whoever proposes to irritate and annoy Great Britain, and alienate British feeling, is a very bad American and a very unwise man." The two countries have too much in common, we hope to make it possible for such a course to be adopted by the responsible government of the United States.

Navy Notes.

The following list of officers who have been specially promoted for services in South Africa has been sent to us from the Admiralty:—Commander Arthur Henry Limpus to be Captain; Lieutenants Frederic William Smith and Algernon Walker Heneage to be Commanders; Surgeon Charles Marsh Beadnell to be Staff-Surgeon; Engineers Edgar Harold Ellis and Charles Cape Sheen to be Chief Engineers; Gunner William Sims to be Lieutenant, all to date May 2, 1900. The following officers are noted for early promotion:—Lieutenant Lionel Halsey and Surgeon James Grant Fowler. The following Midshipmen are noted for early promotion on qualifying for the rank of Lieutenant:—George Edgar Lewin, Thomas Charles Armstrong, John Richards Middleton, Henry Tresilian Hayes, Robert Cecil Hamilton, Hon. Ian Ludovic Andrew Carnegie, Alick Stokes, Edward George Chichester, and Charles Reynolds Sharp.

Of the above mentioned officers, Commander A. H. Limpus, of the Terrible, was in charge of the men and guns landed from the Terrible in Natal, and was present at all the engagements on the Tugela under Sir Redvers Buller. He has well earned his promotion. Lieutenant F. W. Dean, of the Monarch, was in charge of the guns of the Naval Brigade at the battle of Graspan, and was mentioned in despatches. Our readers will call to mind a comment we made, on its publication, of his report, which was capital reading. Lieutenant A. W. Heneage, of the Powerful, became second in command of the Naval Brigade at Ladysmith after the death of Commander Egerton. Lieutenant Lionel Halsey, of the Powerful, who has been noted for early promotion, also served in the Ladysmith Naval Brigade.

Another well-merited promotion is that of Surgeon C. M. Beadnell, of the Powerful, who landed with the Naval Brigade which was first sent to Stormberg, and then to join Lord Methuen's column. He was present at all the engagements in the advance to the relief of Kimberley, and was mentioned in despatches for his service at Graspan. He afterwards accompanied the column which Lord Roberts took to Bloemfontein, and was present at Paardeberg, where his work under fire as a volunteer was specially commended. His promotion is, we presume, contingent on passing the necessary examination for that rank. He is probably thirty years of age, possibly some years younger, and has, therefore, the prospect of thirty years on the active list before being compulsorily retired. Surgeon J. G. Fowler, of the Powerful, who has been noted for early promotion, was at Ladysmith with the Naval Brigade during the siege. Engineers E. H. Ellis and C. C. Sheen, both of the Powerful, accompanied the Naval Brigade of that ship to Ladysmith, where their services were in continuous demand. The most interesting promotion is that of Gunner W. Sims, of the Powerful, who was with the Naval Brigade which was at Ladysmith during the siege. Our readers will not need to be reminded that in recent times only two instances have occurred of promotion from warrant to commissioned rank. Both were Jubilee honours, and were granted—that of Chief Boatswain J. Webber, for his services in the Sofia on the Nile with Lord Charles Beresford, and that of Gunner R. A. Cathie, for personal gallantry in the Eastern Soudan.

The naval stall at the National Bazaar had only one defect in the eyes of the critics. It was too small, and for this reason, says one of our contemporaries, it was difficult to find it. Surely the signal of Nelson at the battle of Trafalgar was a sufficient sign, if the numerous naval trophies which decked it were not. At any rate, there was quality on the stall and about it, if not quantity. If it was little it was also good. Among the articles on sale were books by Rudyard Kipling, Clarke Russell, Walter Besant, and other navally-minded writers, each volume with the author's signature, photographs of "the Handy Man" and of his captain, and a capital painting of the Powerful "homeward bound," by Martino. The officers of the Vernon had also arranged an electrical exhibition, and demonstrated the working of wireless telegraphy, the telephone on the induction principle, the effect of lightning on ships, &c., Lieut. Lichfield being in charge of this side-show. In fact the Vernons must get special credit for their assistance. Among the ladies at the stall were the Countess of Chesterfield, Viscountess Duncannon, Lady Clanwilliam and her two daughters, Countess of Dalkeith, Lady Augusta Montagu, Lady Amabel Kerr, and the indefatigable hon. secretary, the Hon. Mrs. Charlton, to all of whom and to those others unnamed, the Navy owes thanks.

His many friends will be pleased to see by an announcement in the Times that the rumour given currency to earlier in the week that Sir William White had resigned the post of Director of Naval Construction is without foundation. As is well known, Sir William has not enjoyed good health recently and is taking a well earned and much required rest. The story, therefore, that his successor had been nominated seemed to imply that his holiday was not benefiting him, to the extent we all hope and trust it may. The mention of a possible change in the occupancy of the post which Sir William so ably fills to the national advantage, reminds us of how few chief constructors of the Navy we have had since iron and steel took the place of wood. Virtually Sir Edward Reed was the first constructor in the iron age, although he did not design our first ironclads, and after him came Sir Nathaniel Barnaby, who may be said to have been Sir William White's immediate predecessor. We do not forget the Nile and Trafalgar, vessels which represent a kind of interregnum. Now we are told that if Sir William White is unfortunately obliged by ill-health to retire, Mr. Watts from Elswick will take his place, and though there is probably no better foundation for this statement than for that which led to its being made, the appropriateness of such a choice will be generally acknowledged. It would be merely a repetition of what has occurred before. A man gets his early training under the British Admiralty, he acquires further knowledge as the manager of a private company, and he returns to the public service with the ripe experience acquired in these varied circumstances, hardly to his pecuniary profit, but from motives which cannot fail to win respect and admiration.

The answer which Mr. Goschen gave to Mr. Yerburgh on Monday in connection with the Elswick offer to build a certain number of vessels and deliver them within three years, will satisfy none of his critics. The analogy which the First Lord attempted between the hypothetical case of a picture for which, as it was not finished in time, a sum was re-voted until it was delivered, will be generally held to be far fetched. At all events, it has never before been explained by Mr. Goschen that he was merely asking year after year for the same sums of money. Nor can we find any statement to that effect either in the estimates or in the memorandum which accompanies them. In regard also to the second part of Mr. Yerburgh's question the First Lord does not seem to have been well advised. To assume that Messrs. Armstrong, Whitworth, and Co. would have stated that they could lay down three battleships and two large cruisers, giving delivery of the same within three years of receiving the order, and have made this without consulting the machinery makers or armour plate manufacturers upon whom they would be dependent for carrying out the contract is ridiculous. We are not surprised to see that Messrs. Humphreys, Tennant, and Co., at once write to contradict Mr. Goschen's statement that "the difficulty lies in the main in the provision of armour and machinery." This important firm states distinctly that "so far as the machinery is concerned this difficulty does not exist." As the Sheffield manufacturers have already written to say that the Admiralty programme "is utterly inadequate to keep the Sheffield plant employed," Mr. Goschen is likely to have a bad time of it when the shipbuilding vote is taken. It would not be surprising either if some disagreeable questions were asked about the Albion, which vessel is eating her head off in the Thames Shipbuilding yard.

A valued correspondent urges us not to undervalue the powers of the submersible torpedo boat. We hasten to assure him that we do not, and that having followed with close attention the trials and experiments which have been made with these vessels, we are quite of his opinion that they must be reckoned with in any future war. Where, with all respect to our correspondent, we appear to differ from him is in the effect which this belief has upon our views of dealing with the possible menace of such craft. If we understand him aright he considers it necessary to meet the attack of the "submarine" under water, whereas we, remembering the relative length of the periods which such a boat would spend under water and above prefer to meet it during the latter and more lengthy portion of its cruise. We recognise, as he does, that the "submarine" must be met by some kind of destroyer, but there is nothing, either in the published accounts or in the official reports, to lead us to suppose that our present destroyers could not adequately deal with any existing or projected "submarine."

ROYAL NAVAL FUND.

The seventh annual meeting of the general committee of the Royal Naval Fund, which was founded in connection with the Royal Naval Exhibition of 1891, was held on Monday in last week at the R.U.S. Institution. H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, who presided, was accompanied by Capt. H.R.H. the Duke of York, R.N. Vice-Admiral Sir H. F. Stephenson was in attendance.

Amongst those present were:—The Right Hon. George J. Goschen, M.P.; Admirals Sir W. M. Dowell, Sir J. Dalrymple Hay, Sir G. Willes, Sir A. Heneage, Sir H. F. Nicholson, H. De Kantzow, and Sir W. Graham; Vice-Admirals Sir Compton Domville, R. G. Kinahan, and D. Morant; Rear-Admirals E. N. Rolfe and A. L. Douglas; Sir James N. Dick, R.N.; Gen. Sir H. S. N. Jones, R.M.L.I.; Major-Gen. J. I. Morris, R.M.L.I.; C. H. Scafe, R.M.L.I.; and W. P. Wright, R.M.L.I.; Capt. Sir A. Jephson, R.N., and C. J. Norcock, R.N., and C. Mitchell, R.N.; Sir E. Birkbeck, Sir E. Carbutt, Sir G. H. Chubb, Mr. R. D. Awdry, C.B., Mr. G. T. Lambert, C.B., Mr. H. F. R. York, C.B., Commander B. H. Chevalier, R.N., Lieut. G. R. Maltby, R.N., Lieut.-Col. R. Holden, Mr. J. Rice, R.N., Mr. J. G. Langton, Mr. J. F. Phillips (Secretary), and many others.

The report and balance-sheet for 1899 were presented and adopted. The committee, in their report, stated that in consequence of the measures which they had taken to make the fund more widely known, and the further action suggested by His Royal Highness at the last annual meeting, a much larger number of applications for assistance had been received during the past year, the amount expended in relief being more than double that awarded in the previous year.

His Royal Highness commented on the very satisfactory nature of the report, and assured the committee of his continued interest in the Fund.

On the proposition of Mr. Goschen, seconded by General Morris, Royal Marines, a hearty vote of thanks was tendered to His Royal Highness for his kindness in presiding. The proceedings then terminated.

Navy Personal.

H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, whose course of treatment at Herkulestad, Hungary, has considerably improved his health, will, it is expected, be able to reach London in time to preside at the annual dinner of the Royal Marine Forces on the 7th prox.

H.R.H. the Duke of York, accompanied by Lieutenant Sir Charles Cust, Bart., honoured the officers of the Royal Naval College with his presence at dinner, at their mess at Greenwich, on Monday evening last.

Admiral of the Fleet Sir Henry Keppel arrived at Plymouth on Sunday afternoon, in the P. and O. steamer Massilia, from Singapore. Everyone will be glad to hear of his safe return from a visit to the tropical islands of the East, where he saw considerable active service, especially in North Borneo, sixty years ago. Probably no one ever undertook such a journey at the present age of our senior flag officer.

Admiral of the Fleet Sir J. E. Commerell, V.C., had the honour of being present at the Mansion House on Friday in last week, when the Lord Mayor entertained His Majesty the King of Sweden and Norway.

Admiral of the Fleet Sir F. W. Richards has returned home in the Royal Mail steamer Para, after visiting the West Indies. As important matters of national defence will, in due course, be brought forward for discussion, it would be largely in the interest of the Empire if this gallant and highly distinguished flag officer were given a seat in the Upper Chamber of the Legislature, where his valuable opinions and large experience would prove of great advantage to the Government. A Bill was passed not many years ago by which naval and military officers of great professional and administrative abilities could be called to the House of Lords, where their presence would add importance to the debates of that noble assembly. The late Admiral of the Fleet Sir G. Phipps-Hornby declined a peerage. But the recent senior Naval Lord's vast source of knowledge of our naval requirements, and his almost unsurpassed methods of dealing with them while he was principal adviser of the First Lord of the Admiralty, should be sufficient to induce the Government to avail themselves of his counsel were Sir Frederick disposed to accept such a distinction.

Admiral Sir R. E. Tracey, President of the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, was honoured with a visit from the King of Sweden and Norway on Friday in last week, and attended His Majesty's inspection of the Dreadnought Seamen's Hospital.

Admiral Sir M. Culme-Seymour, Bart., A.D.C., whose period as Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth expires on August 2 next, will, we understand, be relieved at that date. His service in the Mediterranean was, as a matter of policy, extended six months in 1896, but it is improbable that a prolongation of his present appointment will occur.

Admirals Sir Leopold M'Clintock, F.R.S., Sir William Graham, Sir Anthony Hoskins, and the Hon. W. J. Ward were present at the annual meeting of the Royal Geographical Society at Burlington House on Monday last. The president, Sir Clement Markham, announced that Mr. Goschen had promised the assistance of naval officers in the proposed Antarctic expedition. At the banquet held in the evening at the Hotel Métropole, Admiral Ward responded to the toast of the Navy.

Vice-Admiral Sir J. R. T. Fullerton, of the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, attains the age of sixty on August 10 next. In obeying Her Majesty's command in 1884, while serving in the Sapphire in China, Sir John gave up an active service career in which he would undoubtedly have displayed considerable ability. As he has not hoisted his flag since promotion from Captain, he should be compulsorily retired, but it is probable that Her Majesty will, by special order in Council, provide for Sir John's retention on the active list, in addition to the regulated number of flag-officers of his rank. This would admit of the promotion to Rear-Admiral of Captain R. Craigie, of the Cambridge, and, if an exceptional vacancy occurred before August next year, advance Commodore E. H. M. Davis to flag rank.

Vice-Admirals Sir Compton Domville and Sir Cyprian Bridge are, we believe, to be given the Channel and China commands respectively, when they become vacant in December next. Sir Cyprian Bridge is undoubtedly a most suitable flag-officer for this important appointment, where tact and cool judgment are requisite in dealing with the affairs of the Far East, which may at any time become complicated, and necessitate the Commander-in-Chief acting on his own responsibility. His large experience in the Gunner and Intelligence departments, together with his experience of three years with the Australian Squadron, eminently fit him for the command of the China station.

Vice-Admiral Sir J. A. Fisher, Commander-in-Chief of the Mediterranean Fleet, left Malta on Wednesday, with a portion of the vessels under his orders, for the Balearic Isles, Gibraltar, and Naples, returning to the naval headquarters on the 26th prox. He will again leave Malta for the eastern portion of his command on July 7.

Rear-Admiral Sir Gerard Noel hoisted his flag in the Alexandra on Monday last, and assumed command of the First Reserve Squadron and the Naval Reserves. Paymaster A. R. Parker, who was Sir Gerard's secretary in the Mediterranean, and promoted for his services during the troubles in Crete, accompanies him in his new appointment.

Commodore G. A. Giffard, of the Charybdis, arrived at Halifax on Monday last, and was to leave to-day for the Newfoundland Fisheries.

Commodore R. L. Groome, commanding the South-East Coast of America station, arrived in the Flora at Monte Video on Sunday last.

Captain H. R. Dudding, of the Iphigenia, arrived at Portsmouth on Saturday last, and will pay off his ship at that dockyard.

Captain the Hon. Hedworth Lambton, of the Powerful, was present at the opening of the Royal Tournament in the Agricultural Hall on Friday of last week, and had the satisfaction of seeing a detachment of his men acquit themselves with highly appreciated ability. On the following evening he was a guest at the annual dinner of the Newspaper Press Fund, and, in returning thanks for the toast of the "Imperial Forces," referred in eloquent terms to General Baden-Powell and his 300 white men in their glorious defence of Mafeking. Of our Colonial brethren he could not speak too highly. A finer lot of fighting men never existed, and they were, if anything, better than ourselves. In most feeling terms he referred to the late Mr. G. W. Stevens, who, apart from his brilliant journalistic ability, was one of the most delightful men he had met in social life. Soldiers and sailors all recognised the kindness with which correspondents did their duty.

Captain A. J. Horsley, of the Europa, arrived at Batavia on Monday, and was to leave on Thursday last for King George's Sound, W.A. The vessel is of too much draught to coal alongside the Tanjong Priok at the Dutch East-Indian Capital. It is unfortunate that one of our largest cruisers cannot steam direct from Colombo to Albany.

Captain J. L. Marx, of the Proserpine, has gone to the south-east coast of Hayti to assist the transport Carinthia, stranded on the 15th inst., while conveying a large number of mules from the American continent to South Africa.

Captain John Denison, of the Melpomene, left Aden on Monday last for Portsmouth to pay off, having been relieved the previous day by Commander W. H. Nicholson, of the Cossack, who was accompanied by the Otter. Captain E. A. Symons, of the Pomone, left Aden on Sunday to convoy the Otter to Colombo.

Captain H. Leah, of the Diana, with paid-off crews from Sydney, N.S.W., left Albany, W.A., on Tuesday last for Devonport, via the Suez Canal.

Captain L. E. Wintz commissioned the Goliath on March 26 last, and is still detained at Chatham by the defects of the engines of that vessel. The Otter, which he was to have conveyed to China, will be very near that station before he leaves England, as his departure is not likely to occur until next month.

Captain F. J. Foley, of the Furious, rejoined the Channel Squadron this week, the vessel under his command having been nearly four months in dockyard hands at Chatham.

Captain Hugh P. Williams, Naval Attaché at St. Petersburg, has been allowed to cursorily examine the forts of Batoum and inspect the defences of the Russian ports in the Caspian. The minds of local officials appear to have been disturbed at this somewhat unusual concession.

Captain Vernon Tisdale, of the Theseus, embarks the Government expedition at Gibraltar for Alicante to observe the eclipse of the sun on the 28th inst., as that luminary will be totally obscured across the Spanish peninsula. The eminent astronomer Sir Norman Lockyer left Plymouth on Saturday last in the Orient steamer Oruba, to embark on the Theseus. We referred last year to Sir Norman's appreciation of the services of Captain A. Chisholm-Batten and the officers and men serving under him in the Melpomene on the East Indian station in ably assisting the astronomers at the eclipse of 1898, and we are sure that Captain Tisdale will gladly afford similar help, if necessary, to the chief and his colleagues, who are about to undertake most important observations in the interests of science.

Commander W. P. Dawson, relieved from the Waterwitch after three years in command, and Lieutenant Cyril Asser, invalided from the Phoenix, arrived at Plymouth on Sunday last in the P. and O. steamship Massilia from Hong Kong.

Commander Sir R. Arbuthnot, Bart., of the Royal Sovereign, won the veterans' race at the naval sports at Malta on the 10th inst, and Lieutenant Oswald Barry, of the Cesar, the officers' obstacle race. At the naval gymkhana on the 13th inst. the latter officer won the "V.C.," "polo ball," and "cigar" races, and Sir Robert was second in the first-named event.

Sub-Lieutenant Wion de M. Egerton is promoted Lieutenant, after one year's junior service, for meritorious examinations at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, and at the Portsmouth scientific establishments.

Midshipman James Menzies, of the Doris, we regret to say, died at Bloemfontein of enteric fever on Friday in last week.

Midshipmen H. S. W. Boldero and G. L. Hodson, late of the Terrible, who were left behind in South Africa, arrived in London on Sunday last by the Union and Castle steamship Lismore Castle, invalided from the seat of war.

Major H. H. Roberts, R.M.L.I., who retired in December, 1897, has been given a majority in the Royal Home Counties Reserve Regiment. He holds an extra certificate for Hythe, and obtained a first class in gunnery.

Hon. Major G. White, R.M.L.I., obtains the additional Greenwich Hospital Pension for retired quartermasters, sanctioned by Order in Council January 29 last. He served with the Royal Marine Batn. during the Crimean campaign.

ERRATUM.

The name of the Fleet Engineer who has been awarded a Greenwich Hospital Pension, mentioned on page 491 of our last issue, should have been G. Fullerton Bell, and not as there stated.

THE INVASION THEORY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR.—There appears to be a great deal of rubbish talked both by the French and also by Mr. Stead as to the possibility of an invasion of England by France. The idea propounded seems to be that given twenty-four hours 100,000 men could be landed on the English coast, either by fishing boats or by transports. I believe it is a fact that Boulogne and Calais are the only two ports in the history of France from which invasions have been attempted on England; or Boulogne, Calais, Barfleur, and St. Malo the landing places of English troops in bygone history.

In 1859 the old chateau in which I resided was at Cape Cure, Boulogne, on site of present docks. As I well remember being then in the French camp, and as far as I remember about 50,000 troops were gathered in and around Boulogne, and every day regiments with artillery marched down practising embarkation. What on? Flat-bottom boats. But, alas, several boats sank, guns and all, for the slightest gale rendered embarkation impossible, and the idea was given up.

My object in writing this is simply to show: First, that no harbour exists large enough to hold the transports required to embark not the 100,000 but 250,000 that would be required for an invasion. Secondly, that, inasmuch as the average French fishing vessel only carries from 20 to 40 men, it would be impossible to embark this vast army from even half a dozen harbours. Thirdly, that not 24 hours, but one month at least would be required to form the camps and muster the vessels. So that, even if we had not a single vessel in the Channel, we in England could concentrate an immensely superior force at any point threatened in less time than the French could land in, as our railways along the coast opposite those ports are in touch with Aldershot, Portsmouth, London, and Plymouth, to say nothing of northern stations. How are the French going to land? In what sort of boats? How about their cavalry and artillery? There never has been a successful invasion of England since the Norman Conquest, and this only because England was split up into factions, for William of Orange came by invitation and brought no army.

 Report.

"I cannot speak too highly of the gold watch,
 No 17,179 of your make, and which I purchased from you in January, 1875. It was my constant companion during the winter 1875-76 in the Arctic and accompanied me sledging. It was about the best, if not the very best, in the Discovery and since my return home continues to perform

THE COLT AUTOMATIC QUICK-FIRING MACHINE-GUN
AND DUNDONALD GALLOPING
GUN-CARRIAGE.

Colt Automatic Guns, taking the English Service ammunition of
'303 calibre, and mounted on DUNDONALD GALLOPING CAR-RIAGES, are now being largely used in South Africa, both by Imperial and Colonial troops.

The Dundonald Carriage carries 2,000 rounds of ammunition, loaded in belts ready for immediate use, and is protected by patent armour plate.
The Carriage can be taken into action by one man and horse, and can be unlim-bered and brought into action within the space of thirty seconds, the Colt Gun being then ready to pour out a stream of bullets at the rate of over 450 rounds per minute, or less if required.

The Dundonald Galloping Ammunition Cart is constructed to carry either 7,000 or 10,500 rounds, loaded in belts and ready for transfer to the Colt Guns at a moment's notice. This also can be galloped into action and unlimbered with the same speed as the Gun Carriage, and therefore forms a most valuable adjunct to the Colt Gun and Dundonald Carriage.

The Dundonald General Service Cart. Specially
adapted for South African Service. The lightest, strongest, most serviceable
Two-wheeled Cart made. Constructed with a Steel Frame and Hide Bottom.
Carries over 1,000 lbs. of Baggage, contains over 100 cubic feet covered space,

THE SURRENDER OF JOHANNESBURG AND PRETORIA.

NEWS of a startling and unexpected nature reached London on Thursday morning. The special correspondent of the Daily Mail, Lord Rosslyn, telegraphing from Pretoria on Wednesday, at 11.40 a.m., stated that Pretoria would be occupied in about two hours from that time, without resistance; that the President had gone to Waterval Boven, and that the Burgomaster was authorised to receive the British. A Reuter's despatch of the same date from Pretoria stated further that the British advance guard was half-way between Johannesburg and Pretoria, that a force was also reported at Hatherley, west of the capital, on the Delagoa Bay Railway, and that the Boer forces had been dismissed from the forts round Pretoria. Two important despatches from Lord Roberts at Germiston, also sent off on Wednesday, were published by the War Office on Thursday. In the first he announced that the Commandant of Johannesburg had begged him to defer entering that town until Thursday, to allow of its complete evacuation by the armed burghers, and to this request he had agreed. In the second despatch the Commander-in-Chief referred to severe fighting sustained by General Ian Hamilton's column on the previous day, which we describe elsewhere, and to the disposition of his troops. On Thursday, as prearranged, the surrender of Johannesburg became an accomplished fact. Her Majesty's troops took peaceable possession of the town, and the British flag floated over the Government buildings. Lord Roberts's mounted forces were then but a day's march from Pretoria, and any hour may bring the welcome news that the capital of the South African Republic—the grand objective of the campaign—has passed into the keeping of Great Britain. The war will then be virtually over, although guerilla fighting may continue for a time. The week has been fruitful in great events, and would have been noteworthy had it recorded nothing more than the annexation to the Queen's dominions of the Orange Free State—henceforth to be known as the "Orange River Colony." Since the war of 1870-71 there has been no more brilliant military achievement than Lord Roberts's rapid advance from Bloemfontein to Johannesburg, a distance of about 250 miles, in twenty marching days.

A bold and well-executed strategical movement preceded the passage of the Vaal by the right wing under General Ian Hamilton. This movement was, no doubt, partly intended to mislead the enemy as to the true point of passage, and in that respect was completely successful. The right wing, well in advance of Lord Roberts's central column, which, as before, followed the railway, occupied Heilbron on the 22nd, after a smart action at Rhenoster River, the forcing of which was stoutly disputed. Engelbrecht Drift, on the Vaal, lay eighteen miles due north of Heilbron, and the enemy, supposing it to be Hamilton's intention to attempt the passage at that point, was reported to have made preparations to oppose him there in force. The central column was then at Honing's Spruit, a day's march in rear, and General French, nearly twenty miles ahead on the left, was across the Rhenoster. Both wings were thus operating far in advance of the centre, and making their dispositions preparatory to forcing the line of the Vaal. On the 26th ult. Lord Roberts, in a brief despatch from Wolvenhoek, a point on the railway fifteen miles south of the Transvaal frontier, announced that the advanced portion of his force crossed the Vaal on the Queen's birthday near Parys, a point lying twenty-four miles to the west. There is some reason for thinking that the passage of the river at Parys may have been effected by the troops under Lord Methuen's command which had been working up along the Vaal from Hoopstad. General Ian Hamilton had then reached Boschbank, thirty-five miles north-west of Heilbron, where he was on the 22nd. At Boschbank he was eight miles west of the main line, instead of twenty-three miles east of it, having marched obliquely across Lord Roberts's front, and formed a junction with the left wing under General French. On the 25th French crossed at Lindique's Drift, ten miles west of the railway, while General Broadwood's cavalry brigade secured Wonderfontein Drift three miles higher up the river, where he covered the passage of Ian Hamilton's column on Saturday. On Sunday Lord Roberts with the remainder of his troops passed to the north bank at Viljoen's Drift south of Vereeniging. The drift had been seized beforehand by the 4th Mounted Infantry Corps under Colonel Henry after a slight skirmish, an attempt being made at the same time to save the railway bridge, which was only partially successful as the most northerly span was blown up and wrecked by the retreating Boers. The 3rd Cavalry Brigade, which crossed the day before at Engelbrecht Drift, covered the main column to the east. The various points by which the British Army entered upon Transvaal territory covered a front of some twenty-five miles. When the last of Roberts's columns passed to the north of the river on Sunday morning the operation, which commenced on the Queen's birthday, was completed. The territory hitherto known as the Orange Free State then lay subjugated behind the British Army, and at Church parade that day the Commander-in-Chief proclaimed its annexation by Great Britain.

The series of rapid and skilful movements, by which the bulk of the mounted troops were thrown across the Vaal in advance of his left centre, enabled Lord Roberts both to save the coal mines south of Vereeniging from destruction, and also to secure the comparatively open country lying to the westward of the main line of advance for the further forward movements of his mobile wings against the right of the Boer positions south of Johannesburg. Monday saw the army early in motion again, and on that day the headquarters reached Klip River, twenty miles to the north, and but fifteen from Johannesburg. French and Ian Hamilton were operating ten miles to the westward. Sinister rumours had for some time been abroad that the mines and other property at Johannesburg were doomed to destruction, and although little credence had been given to the reports, the Commander-in-Chief doubtless desired to place that important town and district beyond the reach of any desperadoes who might be tempted, through a desire for revenge, to commit acts of wanton destruction before the arrival of the British. The march was therefore pressed forward without intermission. Position after position, entrenched and evidently intended to be stoutly defended, was abandoned without a blow, the enemy retreating in hot haste at all points. At Klip River Station the last train, containing five of the enemy's guns, was all but captured by the West Australians, who dashed into the station as the train steamed out towards Pretoria.

Continuing his rapid march on Tuesday, Lord Roberts in the afternoon occupied Germiston, ten miles east of Johannesburg and little more than thirty miles from Pretoria. He was then in possession of Natal Spruit Station, the junction of the south-eastern railway leading through Heidelberg to northern Natal, and of Elandsfontein station, the junction of the south-western railway connecting Johannesburg, Potchefstroom, and Klerksdorp with the main line. The enemy, not expecting the British until the next day, had not carried off all their rolling stock, and no mines, so far as Lord Roberts knew at the time of his despatch, had been injured. The seizure of these junctions secured for the Commander-in-Chief a central position, cutting the various portions of the defending forces from one another, paralysing their further efforts, and rendering him master of the situation. On Wednesday Johannesburg was practically surrounded by the British. The headquarters with the 11th Division and heavy artillery was south of the town. The 7th Division with Gordon's Cavalry and Mounted Infantry held the northern heights. Hamilton lay due west at Florida, which was not occupied without a heavy engagement on Tuesday, in which the Gordon Highlanders bore the brunt of the fighting, and cleared the enemy's position with the greatest gallantry, and the City of London Imperial Volunteers greatly distinguished themselves. French was a few miles to the north-east. Lord Roberts, with his forces so disposed, had the place completely in his power, but he consented to delay his entry for twenty-four hours at the urgent request of the Commandant, as already stated.

While Lord Roberts was pushing his main army forward at the utmost speed towards Pretoria, Sir Redvers Buller remained inactive before the formidable lines of Laing's Nek, where 8,000 Boers were said to block his way. Had he so desired, he might, with his powerful Army Corps of 30,000 men, have forced a passage through the Pass, or found a way round it, but in resting inactive he has played a well-considered part in this ably-conducted campaign. A powerful section of the enemy's forces, which otherwise might have reached Johannesburg and delayed Lord Roberts's advance, was thus held inactive within their trenches under the shadow of Majuba and Pogwani mountains, until their retreat on Johannesburg and Pretoria was effectually cut off, and their further co-operation in any system of organised defence rendered impossible. Although abstaining from offensive operations in obedience to the general plan, Sir Redvers had been concentrating his force for an early forward movement. General Hildyard's (5th) Division marched into Newcastle on Sunday and joined Headquarters. On the same day General Buller, annoyed by the pressure of the enemy on his right rear, despatched General Hildyard to seize Utrecht, and General Lyttelton to move on Doornberg and Vryheid. Utrecht was occupied without resistance, and an important step was thus taken towards turning the flank of the Boer position at Laing's Nek, the early abandonment of which is now probable.

General Rundle, still operating to the east of the main line of advance, was engaged with a large Boer force near Senekal on Monday, and on the same day General Brabant had two of his patrols cut off and captured. General Baden-Powell, with a force from Mafeking, is reported from a Boer source to have occupied Zeerust on Monday, and General Hunter, with his Division, is said to be also moving eastwards from the western railway at Maribogopan. Colonel Plumer is guarding the railway north of Mafeking, now in working order to Bulawayo. Of the movements of Sir F. Carrington there is nothing to record, except that the highest praise is due to the gallant Canadians and Australians detached by him to join Colonel Plumer in the relief of Mafeking, for the marvellous rapidity of their marching and the gallantry displayed by them on the occasion. All accounts are agreed as to the brilliancy of their performance, which shows the excellent "stuff" of which our Colonial troops are made.

THE PEERS AND THE ARMY.

THE debate raised in the House of Lords last Friday evening was a most useful one, if in some respects it proved disappointing. It was opened by the Duke of Bedford, as chairman of the newly-formed Service Committee of Peers. It was his Grace's first appearance in the character of a legislative orator, but it will be admitted by all who heard him that he acquitted himself admirably. Not only was his language well chosen, but he displayed a surprisingly broad grasp of his subject, which augurs well for the future if the committee over which he presides is to become a factor in connection with the Imperial Parliament. The Duke of Bedford did not deny that the War Office has, on the whole, done its work well since the war broke out in South Africa, and that Lord Lansdowne, judged by the standard of his predecessors, has shown himself to be a minister well qualified to have charge of the department in a national crisis. It was not, as he put it, "the failure of our system, but the lamentable inadequacy of our present military resources which was the subject of universal anxiety." What the peers look for, he went on to say, "is an increase of the quantity and quality of the material necessary for the military needs of the Empire." Other noble lords followed in much the same strain, the one thing particularly noticeable being the unanimity with which all speakers condemned—and that in no measured language—the policy of the War Office with regard to the Militia. In this matter Service men in both Houses are completely in accord, we are glad to find. As the Duke of Bedford put it, the Militia is now some 30,000 men short of its establishment. He was scarcely astonished at this. What he did marvel at was that "its present strength is what it is considering the wet blanket of illiberality with which the War Office has for years treated the force."

Lord Lansdowne's reply was characterised by that clearness and open-mindedness which has marked all his utterances since he assumed the duties of his present office. There was no overlooking the fact that the Minister for War recognised that he was called upon in certain details of his defence to make the best he could of a very bad case. His excuses for the neglect of the Militia had such a flavour of sealing-wax about them that they were received with derision. In effect, Lord Lansdowne admitted the full justice of nearly all which had been said, but regretted that the feeling of his advisers was such that he was powerless to do anything to remedy the state of things of which complaint is made in both Houses. He hopes, however, to get over the difficulty to some extent, as it has been decided to appoint an officer to the Headquarter Staff of the Army to watch the interests of the Militia—so that a force "which has traditions and idiosyncrasies of its own should have somebody in the official hierarchy whose special business it is to see that its interests are not neglected." This statement drew forth cheers from the noble lords assembled, which were soon to be followed by expressions of disapproval when the War Minister went on to say that the officer to be chosen was to be an ex-adjutant, not an ex-commanding officer as was supposed. This is a half measure which will be bound to result, we fear, in failure. It is an admission that an adviser is wanted, but at once establishes the force of the arguments adduced by the Duke of Bedford and other speakers, that under the territorial system the Militia has been allowed to drift from bad to worse, until now it had become a veritable nobody's child.

So far as the general policy of the War Office with regard to the Army is concerned, Lord Lansdowne was in some respects happier, for there is no denying the wisdom of much that has been done to render our system more elastic and to popularise the Army among the classes from which the best recruits are drawn. As regards the Royal Reserve Battalions, the War Office, we learn, received in all some 30,000 applications for enrolment, and the services of about 20,000 have been accepted, these being men in the prime of life, i.e., between thirty and forty years of age, the majority under thirty-five. And the best possible reports have been received as to their conduct; this notwithstanding the severest of tests to which they were for weeks subjected in being left with £10 or £12 in their pockets and nothing whatever to do, owing to the absence of officers, arms, and equipment. Lord Lansdowne does not view with favour the idea of accepting the services of these men until they have completed twenty-five years' service, for the purpose of forming a standing Reserve, and we agree with him. There is no immediate necessity, we believe, for the whole of the men being retained. At the same time it would be the height of all folly to allow them all to revert to civil life at the end of their twelve months, when many may wish to remain on to complete a longer term of engagement. Unless this were contemplated it would be impossible on any grounds to justify the reckless waste which the formation of these battalions has involved, every man having received a bounty of £22 for a year's service. The arrangement by which the services of the men would be retained, Lord Lansdowne thinks, would be "a very bad bargain for the country." But what can be said for the existing arrangement? It is ten times worse, if, as we infer, it is proposed that the men shall all drift back into civil life in March 1901—a large number to become perhaps idlers in the land.

It is satisfactory to know that considerable progress is being made in the formation of the new units, the raising of which was announced some time ago. These consist of three cavalry regiments, averaging 500 men each and 270 horses; seven batteries Royal Horse Artillery and thirty-six field batteries; two battalions each for the Irish Guards, Northumberland Fusiliers, Liverpool Regiment, Worcestershire Regiment, Middlesex Regiment, and Manchester Regiment; besides large additions to Royal Engineers and departmental corps. A commencement has only just been made to bring together the Irish Guards, and as regards other units 370 men per battalion have already been obtained and ten officers, according to Lord Lansdowne's figures. It would be manifestly unfair to regard the Government scheme as a final settlement, or anything like a final settlement, of the big question of national defence. That is a matter of vital importance to the Empire which can only arise when the campaign in South Africa has been brought to a conclusion. The present measures must be viewed in a tentative sense. That many of them are in the right direction is proved by the favour with which they have been accepted everywhere. For years past even the man in the street has been brought to recognise that the safety of the country have been sacrificed to a pettifogging policy which has put party interest before everything, and the effect of the war in South Africa has been to bring this home to him. Lord Lansdowne has shown a disposition to meet the wishes of the public, and as a result he has brought much credit on the Cabinet of which he is a member. Unfortunately, the other night one or two remarks fell from his lips which have caused people to suppose that pressure is being put upon him to curb his energies in the direction of augmentation. One can only hope that this is a false impression. It is undesirable, as we say, to launch big schemes for the betterment of systems just at present; but, so far as the Militia and the Reserve battalions are concerned, an opportunity is afforded us of putting systems on a sounder footing, and it would be an immense pity if the occasion were allowed to pass without something being done to produce confidence. The whole tone of Lord Lansdowne's remarks on these two heads was too apologetic to carry the weight that they should have done. Some members of the Government have adopted such a flippant attitude in regard to the question of defence that Lord Lansdowne may have found himself placed at a disadvantage. We are ready to make all allowances; but a Minister for War, at a moment like the present, has to accept the responsibilities of office. The reputation of Lord Lansdowne stands so high that it would be matter for regret if he allowed himself to fall a victim to the tricks of party government, when he must know that by standing to his guns he would have a united Empire at his back.

Army Notes.

The discomfiture of the Boers is complete. They were ready enough to fight in British Colonies and in the Orange River Colony, the new name of the Free State, but they have shown precious little capacity for fighting on their own soil. Naturally enough this hardly endears them to their late allies, who having borne the brunt of the campaign, are now left in the lurch. They deserve no better, but it is an interesting development of the situation. The collapse of the Boer resistance fulfils the predictions of old colonists, made early in the campaign. They never dreamed that the war would find the mother country completely unprepared. The moment Lord Roberts appeared on the scene and adapted his strategy and tactics the whole aspect of affairs seemed to undergo a change. The British advance has since been one magnificent triumph. The Boer burgher cannot stand continued defeat, and he will not face a powerful enemy on his own soil. He is not "a first-class fighting man" by any means, and, only for our mistakes, no one would ever have imagined that he was. His day ended when his entrenched positions were turned by flank movements. With everything in his favour the Boer has not proved that he can stand his ground before mounted troops. He is driven from pillar to post as though the predictions of M. Bloch had never been heard. The Boers are bitterly disappointed at the failure of the Cape Colony Dutch to rise in their tens of thousands, and at the neutral attitude of Mr. Schreiner and Mr. Hofmeyr. They had no idea that England could put more than 100,000 men in the field, believing that the main strength of her Army would be required in India to resist a forward move by Russia. Success on their part was not only to lead to foreign intervention, but to the downfall of British power in the world. Finally, the marksmanship of the average soldier, and British generalship, have astonished them into admiration. And since these things are so, the war is coming to an end. It will be remembered when the first Transvaal War is forgotten.

In one of his recent letters to the Morning Post Mr. Winston Churchill made an appeal which must have found an echo in the hearts of those who know Sir William Gatacre, or his record of fine service in the field in India and in the Soudan. The brilliant and courageous correspondent appears to have known the general in one or other of his campaigns, and he draws a touching picture of the gallant officer in his home-coming in contrast with his position in the Soudan, when he was one of the shining lights of the Army, full of energy and life, and endeared to his troops by his personal qualities. Some day the mystery of that sudden unhappy despatch will be known, and justice will be done, if injustice has been perpetrated; but nothing can ever make amends to any officer who has been deprived of his command in the face of the enemy.

Mr. Churchill also had an opportunity of drawing a capital pen and ink sketch of an officer whose name has not been so prominent in the press correspondence or in the despatches from the generals as was expected—a matter of chance, perhaps, certainly not a matter of choice, for a more forward and willing sabreur than Major-General Brabazon is not to be found in any army; but it was not till the other day he had an occasion apparently for coming to the front on his own hook, and he had for the nonce a piece of good luck in having Mr. Winston Churchill by his side to describe his friend's service and conduct, and to pen a vigorous, picturesque, and truthful Service biography of the gallant officer who is known in and out of the Army with affectionate brevity as "Brab."

The resignation of General Galliffet is of evil omen for France. A firm hand, a chivalrous spirit, the soul of a patriot, "valour and discipline" his watchword for the Army, a soldier and a gentleman, Galliffet was called at a time of trouble to put the War Office in order and to clean out the bureaux which had been defiled by the base and traitorous creatures whose corruption, falsehood and treachery were exposed to the world in the course of "L'affaire Dreyfus." He set to work without delay. Satisfied of the guilt of Dreyfus, as his predecessors in office had been, he resolved to stamp out the fires which were menacing with destruction the basis of society. He insisted on the maintenance of absolute obedience to the powers that be on the part of the Army, and he seized on the verdict of the Rennes Court Martial as an opportunity to issue the General Order which proclaimed the finality of the case, and declared that the "incident" of the Dreyfus case was closed. Without fear, favour, or affection he dismissed officers, no matter how eminent, who evinced a refractory temper; and, old Imperialist as he was, he allowed no man in the Army to avow hostility to the Republic, for he accepted that form of government as a compromise which for the time saved France from infinite danger within and without. The outbreak of the "case," which had, we thought, been handed over to "posterity," proved too much for Galliffet's chafed spirits—he was not strong enough, he confesses "to control the emotions," we suppose, "of contemptuous anger and disgust which were aroused by the disorder, violence, and vulgarity" of the legislative mob around him. Wounded in body and mind he handed over his portfolio to a successor who is not to be envied. It will be welcome news to the socialists and political fanatics who knew that as long as Galliffet held office they could expect no mercy if they resorted to force, and who had heard of the way in which, to use the Cromwellian phrase, he "had execution of them" on the day the Communards marched out from Paris to overthrow the Government at Versailles, and got "between the devil and the deep sea"—Galliffet on one side and Valerien on the other. It was poor compensation for the defeat at Floing on September 1, 1870, when he led the desperate charge of his brigade on the Prussians; but at least he had done his duty to France on the mob who were bent on the overthrow of M. Thiers, the elected representative of the people. No one was better aware of the good qualities and the defects of the French Army than he was, and in his own person he was an example of the military virtues he desired to cultivate in the soldiers under him.

Colonel Plumer's force has been regarded as unfortunate because the newspaper correspondent has not been able to chronicle its doings from Bulawayo to Mafeking. Hence the public knows little or nothing about them. After reading a letter in the Daily News of last Tuesday, written by a member of the force, one is inclined to think it is just as well. He says that the advance south as far as Crocodile Pools was practically uninterrupted, and, as there he was joined by the finest fighting material in Rhodesia, organised by Colonel Napier, his position was much stronger than it was at Tuli. One troop was formed of men, who, in addition to experience gained in the Matabele Wars of 1893 and 1896, were superior to the Boer in playing his own game. As scouts they were, therefore, first rate. But, owing either to differences of opinion between the responsible officers, or to Colonel Plumer's known antipathy to the principle of scouting, "they were informed that their services were not required," and accordingly they went back to Bulawayo. Even then there were men in the British South Africa Police and the Rhodesia Regiment who were available for scouting purposes, but no such use was made of them. The peace training of the British Army, which produced the disasters at Colenso, Stormberg, Spion Kop, the Modder River, and half a dozen other places, was only less mischievous in its results in Bechuanaland. Instead of placing confidence in a few trusty scouts, a plan of demonstrations and reconnaissances and demonstrations in force was adopted, and until the Boers retired at the end of February "with marked success." The writer goes on to explain that a large number of men on an excursion into the enemy's country seldom take note of anything but their immediate surroundings. They raise a cloud of dust that can be seen for miles, finally returning when the Boers have found out more about them than they have found out about the Boers. With two or three scouts the case is very different. They can choose their own path, and can learn much without being seen. Their safety depends on their keeping a sharp look out. If the Daily News correspondent is to be believed, the strength of Colonel Plumer's force was wasted in "demonstrating and reconnoitring," instead of being turned to account in the relief of Mafeking by "scouting and fighting." It is, however, obvious that Colonel Plumer had to consider the safety of Rhodesia, and that, in the event of a British defeat, the road to Bulawayo would have been open to the Boers. Moreover, on March 31, he showed great skill in trying circumstances outside Mafeking. The truth is, Colonel Plumer, like many other officers in the field, has had to learn that, though the military authorities at home neglected scouting in autumn manoeuvres, it does not pay to neglect it in actual warfare.

The news from Ashanti is serious. As usual, we have underrated the enemy and the strength of the forces arrayed against us. A German West African explorer, Herr Krause, warns us that, because the population of the whole coast is hostile to us, we shall require ten or fifteen thousand men to put down the rebellion; but, as foreigners are in the habit of making these pessimistic prophecies where England is concerned, Herr Krause must not be taken too seriously. As a matter of fact the Bekwais, who command communication with the sea, remain loyal, and other tribes are favourably disposed towards our rule. But there is little doubt that the rising, so far from being a mere outburst of tribal hostility, is the result of a secret conspiracy, which has been maturing for some time, to restore the savage Prempeh. That is to say, the natives are so foolish as to prefer the rule of a bloodthirsty tyrant to the beneficent rule of the British Queen. It cannot be permitted, however. The little garrison at Kumasi must be rescued, and the rebels taught a severe lesson. Unfortunately our first efforts have not been successful. Though it is not easy to follow the advance of the relieving force, it is plain that a detachment was attacked by the rebels near Kuissa, and the officer in command, together with many Haussas, killed. Happily there is news of large reinforcements being hurried to the front. Nine hundred men of the West African Frontier Force are on the move, and the gunboat Magpie has arrived on the coast, and will, no doubt, provide a body of sailors. This is a curious sequel to the Birthday List of last week, but it is not new. The authorities in Pall Mall appear to imagine that the Navy exists for the purpose of supplying the deficiencies of our military organisation. With a proper garrison at Kumasi the present rising would never have assumed large dimensions. Now that it has become serious a strong force is required to put it down, and this fact the home authorities have apparently grasped. Hence the worst of the rebellion may be said to be over.

The latest number of the Militär-Wochenblatt is not well up to date. The critic of the South African War is still dealing with the affair at Reddersburg, the defence of Wepener, and the failure to cut off the flying Boers. Our Berlin contemporary speculates as to the causes of the long delay at Bloemfontein, but is only reflecting opinions expressed in this country. It does not hide from its readers the fact that the defeat of the Boers is certain, but attributes the coming success wholly to our superiority of numbers, and, so far as we can see, not at all to the masterful combinations of Lord Roberts. As to the quality of our troops, the views of Mr. Spenser Wilkinson are quoted. The Wochenblatt expresses the opinion that this writer's argument, that our troops had to go to South Africa to learn their business, indicates an inherent weakness of our Army, which, however, as even German critics must admit, has now learnt its business. Our other German contemporary, the Deutsche Heeres-Zeitung, continues to make the most of the case for the Boers in peculiarly depressing circumstances.

M. Alfred Duquet, in the Echo de l'Armée remarks that the first successes of the Boers left no doubt upon the minds of the French that we were going to be defeated entirely, while now they hold that the tide has completely turned, and that the struggle is at an end. The truth, he says, lies between the two. If the Boers attempt to wage the grande guerre they will fail; if they take up guerilla warfare—the guerre de partisans—they will have some chance of success. It is necessary for them to keep their heads, and to fight à la Russe and à l'Espagnole, and to have before their minds the examples of Moscow and Saragossa. He doubts, however, whether they possess sufficient energy, and are prepared to sacrifice their wives and children to their zeal for national independence. Yet here, he says, is their only chance, and they may remember that if the French had fought on in 1871, after the capitulation of Paris, they would have won much easier terms from the victors. A good deal of this, as M. Duquet says, is hypothesis, but what he declares is not hypothesis is that our officers are incompetent and our troops of little value, being no longer the men of Waterloo or of Inkerman. We believe that M. Duquet, who is a critic deserving respect, will change his mind when he has read more.

What M. Duquet does cheerfully recognise is the superb quality in our composition as a people which caused us to receive intelligence of reverses with calmness. "At the beginning of hostilities, when their troops were driven back, their garrisons invested, their regiments melting away through war and sickness, like butter in the July sun, far from dismissing their generals and responsible ministers, and condemning the war, the nation agreed to maintain them in power to see the business through. In France in such a case we should have changed them ten times, and even the Government, as on September 4, 1870—a circumstance which was worth more to the Prussians than the winning of several battles, as I have demonstrated in my eighth and last volume on the siege of Paris." Indeed, he generously admits that the British quality he admires has enabled us to reconstitute our armies, and to secure victory, if "par malheur, encore une fois, la force prime le droit." To this splendid spirit of large-mindedness M. Duquet attributes our prosperity and greatness, for, as he says, it invariably produces confidence at the right moment.

Sir George White told the distinguished and enthusiastic audience at the banquet given to him on Monday by the Ulster Association that he "was not a practised speaker," but he has had considerable occasion, since he came home, for exercising natural gifts in that direction, and there are others to come, notably the dinner which awaits him in Antrim under the presidency of the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava. On Monday last Sir George paid a tribute to the late Earl of Ava, whose name had been mentioned by the Marquis of Londonderry in the speech in which he proposed the health of the guest of the evening, and uttered a eulogy which touched the hearts of those who heard it. Higher praise could not be given to any man, nor could any have been better deserved. A true Christian knight, Lord

Ava left home and country to succour those who needed help, and he gave up his life for them:—

"I have," said Sir George, "never, in the course of my military career, which has now extended as cadet and as officer of her Majesty's Army over 50 years, met an officer in whom the two finest qualities of the heart were better united. He was as kind as he was brave. (Cheers.) You have referred, my lord, tonight, to the action of Elands-laagte. That action was fought on one of the darkest and most miserable nights that I have ever spent in my life; but Lord Ava was present everywhere throughout it, and after having been in the very thick of the fight, where he longed to be, he was helping the wounded, and doing what he could to relieve suffering and distress."

What nobler epitaph could the House of Clandeboy wish for the gallant scion than that simple record of the closing scene of the short life of one who "was as kind as he was brave," and who endeared himself to all who knew him.

It has been observed with surprise that no mention has been made as yet of the services of Colonel Dartnell, of the Natal Mounted Police, in guiding the retreat of General Yule's column under most trying conditions when they fell back from Dundee, leaving sick, wounded, and stores behind them, and who served throughout the investment of Kimberley. In the Indian Mutiny, Captain Dartnell—then in the 86th, Royal County Down—distinguished himself, especially at the storming of Jhansi, where he led a ladder party and had to defend himself on the top of the wall against a furious attack, in which he was severely wounded, till help came to him from his detachment; and it was owing to an accident and the death of the senior officer that he did not get the Victoria Cross which was promised to him.

It was a very welcome sight to see some of the familiar faces which have been missed of late at the Levée on Monday. There was Admiral of the Fleet Sir Harry Keppel back from the farther East and Field-Marshal Sir F. P. Haines, who has apparently laid in health and strength after his indisposition. Some of the officers who served in the Zulu campaign and in the Transvaal troubles which culminated in the Boer rising, the sad catastrophe at Bronker's Spruit, the investment of the British garrisons of Pretoria, Potchefstroom, and the actions at Ingogo and Laing's Nek, and Majuba, and the recognition of the South African Republic "free and independent" were present, consumed, we may be sure, with regret that they have been left "out of the show"; and, indeed, it may be confessed that, although some of them have no reason to complain, they might have had a share of command in this army of more than a quarter of a million of men in South Africa.

Captain Norton has done good service in calling attention to the fact that the red cross as now used for ambulances and hospitals is too small to be distinguished with certainty at the distance from which rifle fire is effective. Indeed, when there is no wind, and the flag hangs limp, it is difficult to distinguish it even at a few hundred yards. There is reason to believe that some of the regrettable instances that have been recorded of ambulance parties being fired upon when engaged at their work on the battlefields of South Africa have been due to this fact. We are glad to learn, therefore, that the matter is engaging the attention of the War Office. A remedy does not readily suggest itself, but failing a better the proposal that the red cross should be painted larger on waggons, marquees, and bell tents, and that it should be displayed over hospitals by means of a light canvas on a wire frame, is worthy of attention.

The Bill dealing with the constitution of the Volunteer force, the provisions of which were fully set forth in our issue last week, received its second reading in the House of Lords on Monday. The debate to which it gave rise was interesting, but it failed to throw any new light on the proposals of the Government. The speeches were, in fact, little more than an amplification of our own comments on the Bill. The objections which can be urged against the measure are, of course, apparent on the surface. Lord Spencer and Lord Kimberley contended that the proposal to institute Special Service Corps consisting of men willing to give military service if necessary, outside the United Kingdom, would act as a deterrent to enlistment, and that it was contrary to the principle on which the Volunteer force was founded. With regard to the first argument, it may be pointed out that such foreign service will be purely optional. Moreover, the War Office undertake to provide that any man who accepts liability to foreign service, and afterwards desires to be relieved of it, shall be put in a position to free himself. What possible objection can there be to purely voluntary proposals of this kind? For our own part we think with Lord Lansdowne, that the Bill will be acceptable to the great body of volunteers. The War Office, indeed, did not seek to give effect to their proposals until, by consulting a number of representative Volunteer officers, they had satisfied themselves that they would prove acceptable to the force as a whole.

The Bill for the Amendment of the Reserve Forces Act, which was also brought in and read a first time in the House of Lords on Monday, gives another sign that the lessons taught by the war are not being entirely lost upon the military authorities. Under the Act of 1882, which the Bill proposes to amend, the Reservists of the second division cannot be called up until all the Reservists of the first division are exhausted. The inconvenience of this arrangement very soon became evident when we came to mobilise our troops for service in South Africa. As Lord Lansdowne put it in introducing the Bill, regiments were not provided with Reservists of the first division in uniform numbers. Some had more, and some had less, than they required for the purposes of mobilisation; but the law required that the regiment which was deficient in Reservists of the first division must not call upon its men of the second division until all the other regiments had called up all the Reservists of the first division. This anomaly the Bill introduced on Monday will sweep away. After it has passed into law any regiment that has exhausted its Reservists of the first division may have recourse to those of the second division without regard to the proceedings of other corps. The change will to some extent, of course, increase the liability to service of the men in the second division, but we do not think they will be frightened at this if, as is suggested, the War Office add to their Reserve pay. The Bill constitutes a small but very desirable reform in our system of mobilisation.

The report of the Special Committee presided over by Lord Justice Henn Collins, on the subject of War Relief Funds has been laid upon the table of the House of Commons. The Committee, without entering into details, animadvert on the work of the Royal Patriotic Fund Commissioners, and express a hope that that body will make their methods of procedure more elastic and more business-like, as public confidence has been somewhat rudely shaken by past errors of judgment. The committee suggests the organisation of a Central Permanent Committee, on which the various bodies engaged in the collection and management of the various war funds should be represented. The business of this committee would be to deal with the relief aspect of each war emergency as it arises, to it would be entrusted the general control of all the various war funds raised from time to time, whether for the families of soldiers killed in battle or for the wounded. Whilst this Central Committee would retain a general supervision, and decide matters of principle, there is a further proposal that it should work through Local Committees, to which should be entrusted the details of administration, including both the collection and distribution of funds. The idea is that the existing Local Committees of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Families Association and similar bodies should form the nucleus of the proposed local organisation. The committee reports that it has found a certain amount of waste and of overlapping in the present management of the various relief funds, but it expects that maladministration will be avoided under the new system, in which it is hoped that the Royal Patriotic Fund Commissioners will co-operate.

Lord Carrington has informed the Bucks County Council that it is almost certain their request for a territorial regiment will be acceded to by the War Office. We confess that we have some doubts as to the success of the project, much as we sympathise with the movement. Will the county be able to maintain two Line and one Militia battalions? If not, it is almost better that things should be left alone for the present. In the neighbouring county of Berks the Militia battalion has been reduced to an establishment of six companies only. Are the resources of Buckinghamshire so much greater? Other counties, too, lost their identity in 1881. Are all to plead for a reconsideration of claims? If so, endless complications will arise.

The attempt to raise questions with respect to a new South African medal seem to be impolitic. After previous campaigns, months have frequently elapsed before the form of the medal has been approved, and many of the men who have been entitled to the medal have gone to the Reserve before it reached them, whilst others proceeding home on furlough have had nothing to show that they have qualified for it. The disadvantages of this arrangement, or want of it, having been represented to Lord Lansdowne, he has taken steps to prevent any such inconvenience arising on the present occasion. Some weeks ago the authorities at the Mint were communicated with, and Mr. de Saulles, the designer of the Soudan and the Central African medal, undertook to submit a design. This he did in due course, and it was considered so excellent that it was ultimately adopted. To these proceedings certain honourable members take exception, as we say, holding that the design ought to have been submitted to public competition. We fail, we confess, to see any good that would have resulted from the adoption of this course. The War Office has this time set aside the old rules of circumlocution.

It seems likely that ere long canvas for the purposes of home camps will be superseded, to a great extent, by papier maché. The experiment in hutments at Netley Hospital points certainly to the discontinuance of marquees, which are used as officers' messes, canteens, &c., and which are always at the mercy of high winds. It is not a little singular that these structures all come from Russia, Germany, and Denmark. Yet English manufacturers could, no doubt, afford to turn them out at the same, if not less, cost. The price of a building, well lighted and ventilated and draught-proof, is £210, while the fittings bring up the cost to £270. In each hut ten men sleep, take their food, and in wet weather enjoy their indoor recreation without overcrowding. The huts are designed to suit all weathers. They can be built in three hours and taken to pieces in half the time. The Russian huts are twice the size of the others, and are so arranged that, while one-half of the building may be used as mess-room, the middle section is an ante-room, and beyond there is ample kitchen space. The hut on the whole is cheaper than the marquee, more comfortable, and possesses, of course, advantages upon which it is scarcely necessary dwell.

It is an ill wind which blows good to no one. There are some classes of the community to which the war and its results, as evidenced in the increase of the Army, should bring great favours. We refer to the military tailors and accoutrement makers. One only has to run casually through the London Gazette to recognise what a harvest the firms to which we refer must be reaping and will reap by reason of the military development. There never was a time when trade was brisker in these special departments, for it has to be remembered that each new appointment represents an outlay of some £100 in outfit to those upon whom the commission is conferred. "One of the Trade" makes a suggestion, viz., that an influential committee should be formed with the object of collecting subscriptions for the purpose of making an adequate donation to Lady Lansdowne's fund for officers' widows. Many, he says, like himself, do not know exactly what fund to subscribe to, but if there were a properly-organised appeal from £10,000 to £20,000 might easily, he thinks, be raised among those who do business directly with the officers of the Army and Auxiliary Forces. The idea seems to us to be a good one, and might well be taken up. Our correspondent says he is only in a small way of business, but he would willingly send his cheque for a few pounds if someone more influential than himself would take the lead. There ought to be no difficulty in finding any number of willing hands in a work of such real charity.

The War Office has decided, not a moment too soon, to increase the number of military prisons to which governors are appointed. Six are in this category at the present time, Aldershot, Cork, Dublin, Gosport, Kendal and Malta. Four more are to be added to the list. As to the advantages of this arrangement there can be no doubt. The abolition of governors was one of those miserable cheeseparing reforms for which there was absolutely no justification, and we said at the time the change was made that it would not even result in economy. And so it has turned out. For some years past the Inspector-General of Military Prisons has referred in his annual report to the desirability of returning to the old system. The present Inspector-General, Lieut.-Colonel Garsia, has laid great emphasis on the matter, and spoke in his report of last year in on uncertain language, pointing out the absolute necessity of bringing the military prisoners under the influence of a commissioned officer if it is desired to check crime. Considering the waste which is entailed by the presence of large bodies of men in military prisons, it is to us unaccountable that any Minister for War should have been found so wanting in all foresight as to sweep the governors away in favour of chief wardens-in-charge. No arguments were, however, of any avail at the time the "economy" was proposed, and now, as all who knew anything of soldiers maintained would be the case, a recourse is gradually to be had to the old system because the new one has failed so completely that a continuance of it would be an injustice alike to the soldier and the State.

Great credit is unquestionably due to the Royal Army Clothing Factory at Pimlico for the manner in which it has executed orders for the equipment of the forces proceeding to the seat of war. The factory has indeed been passing through an unexampled period of activity. For some months past there have been over 1,300 girls, ranging from 16 to 25 in age, employed at the factory, the sewing machines being driven by steam at a war speed of 1,100 stitches per minute, making khaki and other clothing. In the cutting-out room twenty thicknesses of cloth are pressed together, steel blades with the edge of a razor driven by steam, coming down and cutting out twenty sleeves or other parts of the garment, at a speed of twenty per minute, with a precision which would satisfy a professor of geometry. Every girl is taught to make a garment throughout, it being considered that even if the girls do not work as quickly when making the whole garment, they do it better than if each section was made by a specialist; at any rate they manage to turn out 10,000 uniforms per week. Every soldier out in South Africa carries in the lining of each garment a linen label containing the name of the girl who made it, and if any complaint of scamping is received during the uniform's natural life of twelve months she is certain to hear of it. When it is considered what the labour entailed in the manufacture and distribution of uniform alone, to a force of upwards of 315,000 men means, it will be allowed that Pimlico deserves its meed of praise for the rapidity with which orders have been executed. It is early yet, of course, to pass judgment on the "staying capacity" of the kits supplied. We hear many complaints, it is true. It has to be remembered, however, that the work in South Africa is of the roughest possible kind. The present campaign will be a valuable object lesson, and in no respect will the benefit of the experience prove of more importance than under the head of clothing and equipment. It is to be hoped, therefore, that full attention may be devoted to these questions which have so much to do with the health, comfort, and efficiency of an army in the field.

If Rome found her military colonies invaluable in the pacification of conquered provinces, England has found her soldier settlers a factor in her Imperial development of the first magnitude. Canada is the finest military recruiting-ground in the world, largely because of the strong military element in her original population. In 1664 Louis XIV. sent out the regiment of Carignan, whose officers were either cadets or distant connections of noble houses. These, it need hardly be said, are the origin of the French Canadian military families of to-day. The soldiers of Wolfe founded Upper Canada with the United Empire Loyalists, who had fought for the Mother Country in the American Revolution, and it was their sons, with a few regulars and French Canadian militia, who so gallantly defended Quebec in 1775. In the war of 1812-14 these again formed the strength of the defensive forces of the colony. On the declaration of peace after Waterloo thousands of Wellington's veterans found homes in Canada, an element in the population whose value can hardly be over-estimated. In South Africa the settlement of the German legion introduced a factor into the Dutch problem, which has always been favourable to English interests. In 1857 it was re-enrolled by Sir George Grey and sent to India, where it played a significant part in the suppression of the Mutiny. The transformation of soldiers into colonists, is therefore, not only justified by historical precedent, but by its uniform success. To neglect it in South Africa would only invite disaster in the future. In the Orange State, the Transvaal, and the Cape Colony British soldiers would make ideal colonists, for as settlers they are second to none, and they would, at the same time, form a simple and effective garrison, whose moral weight would do more to secure peace than an army in occupation. How admirably, in case of emergency, such men can be organised into an efficient force history has proved over and over again.

One of the indirect consequences of the Transvaal War is the proposed creation of a French Colonial Army. Absurd as the idea seems to us, a large body of sober public opinion across the Channel believes that, on the conclusion of peace in South Africa, this country will provoke a quarrel with France. There is the Newfoundland Shore Question still unsettled; Egypt may become a burning question any day; and, in North Africa, Morocco clouds the political horizon. Remembering Fashoda, but not the folly which led up to it, the French are preparing for eventualities. They see that the theatre of affairs has ceased to be Europe, and is now the world. They see also that in the South African War this country is employing a Colonial Army. This, and the command of an Imperial cable system, they are resolved to add to the military strength of France. Unfortunately something more than desire is necessary to attain objects of such magnitude as these. France has no colonies because she has no colonists. How, then, can she organise a Colonial Army? To raise fresh troops in Algeria and the East, and provide them with French officers, is only a development of the old system. The Colonial Army of France corresponds not to the Colonial Army of England, but to the forces raised in Nigeria, Egypt, and other tropical dependencies. Self-governing communities such as Canada, Australasia, and South Africa are unknown in the French Empire, which, unhappily for itself, does not contain a fighting race equal to the Sikh or Goorkha, much less the magnificent fighting material of vigorous and hardy colonists. To organise a Colonial Army France must first establish colonies. Even less practical is her desire to connect her dependencies with the Mother Country by a system of cables. For the British Empire to insist on an All-British system of cables is sound, because each province is self-supporting, capable of defending itself, and commercially potential. Not a single French dependency is self-supporting, not one is capable of defence, and not one is a source of strength to the Mother Country. This makes all the difference, and it seems a pity for France that the fact is not recognised, as if it were it would do much, we believe, to clear the political atmosphere.

WHAT CAN WE DO FOR OUR FRIENDS ON THE BATTLEFIELD? KEEP THEM WELL, AND MAKE THEM WELL IN CONVALESCENCE. Read these official communications and reports:—DRS. TRELUTZ and KAISER, Imperial Hospital, Physician, Hospital Agram, AUSTRIA, writes: We have employed HOFF'S EXTRACT OF MALT in convalescence, and for Catarrh, ordinary diseases and impaired digestion with very satisfactory results. As a dietetic, nutrient and Tonic, it is beyond doubt the remedy "par excellence." My indigestion was cured by this strengthening and palatable MALT EXTRACT. MAJOR BURSHIRE, TWICKENHAM. During her visit to Dublin the Queen took great notice of the boys of the Royal Hibernian Military School. In the course of her many drives in the Phoenix Park the boys frequently welcomed Her Majesty with a good British cheer. As a memento of her visit the Queen has just presented the school with a very fine engraving of herself. The picture, which is framed in oak and gold, surmounted by a crown, bears Her Majesty's autograph, "From Victoria R. and I."

The Prince of Wales held on Tuesday, at St. James's Palace, what probably will be the last levée of the century. The chief topic amongst the veterans who attended seemed to be the appointment of an officer who has never seen any active service to the dignity of K.C.B. in the last Birthday Gazette. Such a thing has never before occurred in the Army, except in the case of Royal Princes, since the Order was instituted!

Field-Marshal Sir Donald Martin Stewart, who died on March 26, left property of the value of £104,519 2s. 1d., including net personalty of £103,132 18s. 6d.

General Sir Henry Brackenbury will preside at the annual general meeting of the Royal Artillery Institution, which will be held at the Royal United Service Institution, Whitehall, on Friday next at 3 p.m. The meeting will be followed by consideration of the Royal Artillery charities, Games Fund, Marriage Society, and the Regimental Memorial Fund.

Lieut.-General Sir George White was entertained on Monday evening at a banquet given at the Hotel Cecil by the Ulster Association in London, the Marquis of Londonderry, President of the Association, being in the chair. Among the guests of the evening were Lady and Miss White. Mr. J. Robinson, the hon. secretary, read an address of congratulation. Lord Londonderry proposed the health of General White, and concluded by asking him to accept a testimonial consisting of a presentation centrepiece of silver weighing 484oz. and bearing the inscription:—"Presented to General Sir George Stewart White, V.C., G.C.B., G.C.V.O., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., by the Ulster Association (in London) in appreciation of his prolonged and heroic defence of Ladysmith from November 2, 1899, to February 28, 1900." Sir George White made an interesting speech in reply, in which he described his experiences in Ladysmith and related some interesting anecdotes of the siege. He particularly impressed upon his audience the necessity for steps to be taken to recognise the gallantry of the Indian followers who had rendered such signal service during the siege, and never seemed to mind how they sacrificed themselves so long as they were doing what they thought to be their duty to their Queen-Empress.

In accordance with a resolution passed at a court of the Grocers' Company held on April 25, Sir George White was admitted to the freedom of the Company on Tuesday evening, the ceremony taking place in the hall in Princes Street. The Master (Mr. W. Hamilton Pott), the Wardens, and the members of the court being present. The Clerk (Mr. R. V. Somers-Smith) read the resolution conferring the freedom, which stated that it was in recognition of Sir G. White's "gallantry and skill displayed in the campaign in South Africa, and especially in defence of Ladysmith, whereby the advance of the forces of the Transvaal and Orange Free State was checked and a grave disaster to the Colony of Natal was averted." Sir G. White afterwards subscribed the necessary declaration. The annual "Restoration Feast" of the Company was held subsequently, the Master presiding, at which Sir G. White was the principal guest.

Sir George White, who was gazetted last night to the Governorship of Gibraltar, will leave England on July 5, in order to take up his duties.

The vacancy on the list of Lieutenant-Generals caused by the retirement of Lieut.-General B. L.

Forster, R.A., is to be absorbed, thus bringing the number of officers of this rank and arm down to four.

Major-General Sir Reginald Wingate, who has just reached London from Egypt, was at the Levée on Monday, and had enough to do thanking his friends for their warm congratulations on his promotion.

Major-General Sir William Gatacre resumes command of the Eastern District on Monday next.

Colonel R. H. O'Grady-Haly, C.B., D.S.O., who was placed on the retired list on February 22, 1898, under the fifty-seven years' rule, returns to military employment to command the Dominion Militia in Canada with the rank of Major-General. He knows Canada, having been on his father's staff at Halifax, N.S., from October, 1870, to March, 1878.

Colonel M. S. Crofton, C.B., retains his appointment as A.A.G. Eastern District on appointment as Brigadier-General to command the Militia Brigade embodied at Colchester, he having, in the interests of the Service, been allowed to double the duties.

Colonel M. S. Brownrigg, commanding the 30th-47th Regimental District, Preston, has been appointed to succeed Major-General Eccles in command of the Northern Counties Infantry Volunteer Brigade in addition to his other duties. The appointment has given immense satisfaction to the Volunteers, Colonel Brownrigg's sympathy and interest having endeared him to all ranks.

Colonel the Duke of Montrose, K.T., A.D.C., 3rd Batn. Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, has been appointed to the command of the Militia Brigade at Finner Camp, Ballyshannon, with the rank of Brigadier-General. He has under his command the 4th Batn. East Surrey Regiment, with details 2nd Batn.—20 officers and 935 men; 3rd Batn. York and Lancaster Regiment, with details 1st Batn.—25 officers and 767 men; 4th Batn. Royal Irish Rifles—16 officers and 534 men; and 3rd Batn. Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, with details 1st Batn.—19 officers and 880 men; in all, 30 officers and 3,116 rank and file.

Colonel F. J. Kempster, D.S.O., A.A.G., Madras Army Headquarters, has arrived home on three months' privilege leave.

Colonel T. E. Hickman, Worcestershire Regiment, on arrival at the Cape from Egypt, will take up duty as an A.A.G.

Colonel J. Willcocks, C.M.G., is to leave Cape Coast Castle to-morrow for the front, in command of the column of operation for the relief of Kumasi. He has as his Staff Officers, Captain (Lieutenant) R. S. McClintock, R.E.; with Captains B. A. Wright, Manchester Regiment; H. R. Beddoes, Royal Dublin Fusiliers, and H. J. C. Biss, 5th Batn. Middlesex Regiment.

Colonel J. A. Man Stuart, C.M.G., 3rd Batn. Gordon Highlanders, has been appointed Commandant at the base of operations on the Gold Coast in connection with Colonel Willcocks' expedition to Kumasi. Colonel Stuart served in the China War, 1863-64, with General Gordon at Soochow and the storming of Changchow; also in the Nile Expedition, 1884-85. He recently commanded for five years the troops at Trinidad.

Colonel F. M. Randall, D.S.O., 4th Goorkhas, will act as A.A.G., Punjab Army, during the twelve months that Colonel S. H. P. Graves is absent on home leave.

Colonel J. F. Hilton's selection for the command of the troops at Barbados, carrying, as the appointment does, the rank of Major-General, will save him from compulsory retirement in November next, when he would have attained the age limit as a Colonel.

Colonel E. A. Lee, half pay, formerly of the Durham Light Infantry, is added to the list of superseded Colonels, of whom there are now a dozen at least. Colonel Lee will only have to serve on until August, 1901, when he will attain the age limit.

Colonel W. R. Routh, late Suffolk Regiment, has completed his term of staff service as A.A.G. on the Madras establishment.

Among the officers on the active half-pay list in the "Army List" for May appears the name of Colonel A. J. Price, C.M.G. As, however, Colonel Price, since February last, has been commanding the 4th Batn. West Yorkshire Regiment on active service in South Africa, it is difficult to understand how he can be considered as unemployed.

Colonel C. H. Kelly has been granted an extension of his command of the Provisional Battalion at Shorncliffe, which consists of the depots of regiments on foreign service.

Colonel J. de B. Lynch, I.S.C., has succeeded to Colonel's allowances.

Colonel H. R. D. Thomas, 4th Bombay Cavalry, has been granted an extension of command until February 19, 1901.

Colonel Sir Howard Vincent has been granted a four years' extension of his command of the Queen's Westminster Volunteers. He has been at the head of the regiment since April, 1884.

Colonel H. G. MacGregor, C.B., retired list, has been granted a Distinguished Service Reward of £100 a year. Colonel MacGregor entered the Army as Ensign in the 17th Foot, May 29, 1858, and became a Colonel November 24, 1886. He served in the Zulu War 1879 and the Transvaal Campaign of 1881 (twice mentioned in despatches, medal with clasp, and Brevet-Majority). He went to Egypt with the Expeditionary Force in 1882 (mentioned in despatches and Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel); and in 1885 took part in the Soudan Expedition as A.A. and Q.M.G. at the base and lines of communications at Suakin (mentioned in despatches). He was retired a year ago.

Lieut.-Colonel W. H. H. Waters, M.V.O., R.A., has been appointed Military Attaché at Berlin in succession to Colonel Grierson. Colonel Waters went to South Africa in October last as D.A.A.G. on the staff of Sir William Gatacre.

Lieut.-Colonel A. H. Armytage, retired list has been appointed Staff-Captain, R.A., North Eastern District, York.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Fleetwood Edwards, retired list, R.E., has presented the Royal Hibernian Military School, Dublin, with a two-handled silver bowl for annual competition in athletics. The name of the winner of the year is to be inscribed on one side. On the reverse is the school crest and motto.

The Queen has granted to Mrs. Keith-Falconer, widow of Brevet Lieut.-Colonel C. E. Keith-Falconer, Northumberland Fusiliers, who fell in action near Belmont November 10 last, the use of a suite of apartments at Hampton Court Palace.

Lieut.-Colonel C. F. Stevens, 15th Madras Infantry, has been granted an extension of command for two years.

Brevet - Lieut. - Colonel C. L. Woolcombe, King's Own Scottish Borderers, who was posted to the Punjab on taking up the duties a year ago, has just been transferred to the Bombay establishment, and is succeeded by Major C. P. Triscott, D.S.O., R.A., who has been similarly employed in Bombay. Colonel Woolcombe continues, however, to officiate as A.A.G. for Musketry at headquarters, Simla, a position, from what we hear, which is likely to be confirmed, in which case there will be a vacancy for an A.A.G., Bombay.

Major Sir Claude M. MacDonald, late Highland Light Infantry, the British Minister in China, was gazetted last night as G.C.M.G.

Major H. S. Dalbiac, late of the Royal Artillery, who was killed at Senekal a few days ago, leading his company of Middlesex Yeomanry to victory, was a well-known steeplechase rider. There were few more popular men in the Service than the "Treasure," as he was affectionately called among his friends. Like his brother, Colonel Dalbiac, M.P., he was a great runner and athlete, and his prowess at Eton is still remembered. Only last year he carried off the veterans' race at the "Shop" sports. Now, alas! he has run his last race, and only the memory of him lives. He was of a lively disposition and ready wit, and was beloved by all with whom he came in contact.

Major W. E. Fairholme, C.M.G., R.F.A., will be Assistant Military Secretary and A.D.C. to Lieut.-General Sir George White at Gibraltar.

Major C. C. Anderson, 26th Punjab Infantry, says a telegram from India to the Times, is to be tried by court-martial for alleged insubordination.

Major J. W. Pringle, R.E., has been appointed Inspector of Railways under the Board of Trade, vice Colonel Sir F. A. Marindin deceased.

Major R. T. Hanford-Flood, retired list, late of the Queen's Regiment, has been appointed second in command of the 1st Batn. Royal Home Counties Reserve Regiment, and Major J. C. Tilly, retired list, late Bedfordshire Regiment, of the 1st Batn. Royal Irish Fusiliers Reserve Regiment.

The decision at which the War Office arrived some time ago not to reopen the Staff College until the close of the war would seem to be fully justified in view of the number of students at that institution who are now serving with the forces in the field. A valued correspondent sends us a list of those who, like himself, "have put aside their studies at Camberley in order to obtain practical experience in face of the enemy." Among them are Majors the Hon. W. Lambton and F. S. Monck, Coldstream Guards; E. K. S. Twyford, Scottish Rifles; Brevet-Majors A. G. Hunter-Weston, R.E.; J. G. King-King, the Queen's; W. Campbell, 1st Gordon Highlanders, and A. J. Godley, Royal Dublin Fusiliers; Captains W. A. Adams, 5th Lancers; H. De la P. Gough, 16th Lancers; G. F. Milne, J. G. Baldwin, A. W. Gay, A. W. Paok-Beresford, and R. H. Hare, R.A.; H. B. Williams and C. Coffin, R.E.; A. L. Lynden-Bell, the Buffs; C. Ross, Norfolk Regiment; J. L. J. Clarke, East Yorkshire Regiment; J. H. W. Pollard, Royal Scots Fusiliers; H. A. Levenson, Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers; A. H. S. Hart, East Surrey Regiment; C. H. Jervis-Edwards, Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry; S. J. Jervis, South Staffordshire Regiment; R. Fanshawe, Oxfordshire Light Infantry; A. K. Ellis, King's Own Light Infantry; H. De B. Le Lisle and E. St. G. Pratt, Durham Light Infantry; A. J. Chapman, Dublin Fusiliers; Hon. H. Yarde Buller, Rifle Brigade; and H. G. Waterfield, I.S.O. "All these officers," our correspondent writes, "were fellow-students with me at Camberley at the beginning of October last. I have since met many of them out here doing useful work, for which reward, it is to be hoped, will come in due course."

Brevet-Major P. S. Wilkinson, Northumberland Fusiliers, who has been serving with the West Africa Frontier Force since October 1897, has been appointed Inspector-General Gold Coast Constabulary, and in that capacity took up command recently at Prahsu.

It has been decided, after years of correspondence, that officers of the British Service and of the Indian Staff Corps can exchange if so disposed. The rules on the subject were approved recently by the Secretary of State for India, and the first announcement under the new conditions is that Brevet-Major H. K. Harley, D.S.O., of the Staff Corps, is permitted to exchange with Captain H. E. R. Boxer, 1st Batn. Lincolnshire Regiment. As we have more than once pointed out, there was nothing to be said in favour of a continuance of the old rules, the only merit of which was that they were old. It cannot fail to be an advantage to both Services when officers are allowed a certain freedom of action. We doubt whether many officers of the Staff Corps will avail themselves of the privilege of exchange, but the smallness of the number who will do so will be a justification of the concession which has been made after so many years of agitation.

Captain W. R. Inglis, 1st Batn. Norfolk Regiment, has succeeded Colonel H. Kilgour as Recruiting Staff Officer, Woolwich.

Captains W. E. Bailey, East Yorkshire Regiment; L. O. FitzM. Stack, Border Regiment; and F. M. B. Hobbs, Royal Marines, are employed as D.A.A.G.'s on the staff of the Egyptian Army.

Captain F. G. Anley, Essex Regiment, who has been so flatteringly mentioned by Lord Roberts for his services with the mounted infantry in South Africa, is a son of the late Colonel F. Anley, R.A.

Captain R. W. Macleod, retired list, late of the Cameron Highlanders, has been appointed Brigade Major of the Highland Volunteer Infantry Brigade.

Captain H. Hudson, 19th Bengal Lancers, has been selected to officiate as D.A.Q.M.G., Indian Army Headquarters.

Captain G. S. B. Lyle, R.G.A., Captain-Instructor, School of Gunnery, Shoeburyness, has been appointed an Instructor at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich.

Captain W. T. M. Reeve, 2nd Batn. Leinster Regiment, has been selected for special employment in connection with the operations on the Gold Coast.

A staff captain has been added to the military establishment at Wei-hai-Wei, and the appointment has been filled by Lieut. C. A. Ball-Acton, 2nd Batn. Royal Welsh Fusiliers, stationed at Hong Kong.

Mr. E. R. Cave Browne, C.S.I., Accountant-General at the India Office, retires on pension, and is succeeded by Mr. A. G. Scott. Mr. Scott obtained a writership in the old East India House in 1857, and was appointed a clerk in the Accountant-General's branch in 1860. In 1872 he became a senior clerk, and has for some years held the post of Deputy Accountant-General. The salary of his new appointment is £1,200 a year.

General de Galliffet, the French Minister for War, upon whom the anti-Republicans made a violent attack in the Chamber on Monday, has tendered his resignation, acting on medical advice, his condition being such as to demand rest and quiet. General Andre has being appointed to succeed to the charge of the War Office. General Galliffet wrote to the Premier, "I have the honour to beg you to transmit my resignation to the President of the Republic. I am very unwell, and my health, broken down by my last illness, does not allow me to resist all the emotions of the moment."

In honour of the coming of age of the German Crown Prince, the Emperor has decreed that the King Frederick III. Grenadier Regiment (1st East Prussian) shall henceforth be known as the Crown Prince Grenadier Regiment (1st East Prussian).

One of the most interesting sections of the military department in the Paris Exhibition will be found to be that which contains "military material." Very interesting are the motors designed for service in the field, and the quick-firing guns for land and sea use. The section includes also mountain guns with their mountings, projectiles, armour plates, objects manufactured from aluminum, instruments of precision, and much else. The section devoted to military metallurgy was to be opened on May 13, as well as that for naval boilers and machinery.

The Militär-Wochenblatt is a good deal puzzled as to our purpose in landing Sir Frederick Carrington's force at Beira. It points out that the force is comparatively weak in numbers, and that great distances have to be covered. The Berlin organ hazards the surmise, though without countenancing the belief, that it is intended to strengthen the force by embodying natives as auxiliaries. The Wochenblatt suggests that the purpose is to invade the Transvaal from the north, though it sees great difficulties and even dangers in such an operation. It rather inclines to the belief, therefore, that Sir Frederick Carrington's first purpose is to join Colonel Plumer for the relief of Mafeking. Our contemporary gives a good account of the operations in the south-eastern part of the Orange State. It does not believe, and apparently is correct, that the Boers intended anything more than a disquieting demonstration in the Dewetsdorp region. Since the turn of the tide in South Africa the comments of the foreign papers have grown less interesting, and our French contemporaries are at the present time generally content to print brief telegrams from the seat of war.

The French military authorities have not been slow in giving practical effect to the teachings of the war. The establishment at Bourges has produced a smoke shell for the new field gun, which is intended to burst in front of the enemy's line, and to disguise movements on the friendly side. The new shell will be supplied to the batteries, along with the shrapnel and high-explosive shells. It is stated that a like shell will also be adopted by the Navy, the military authorities having communicated to the naval experts particulars of what they are doing.

The Army Commission met at the French Chamber on Saturday last, and after hearing the Minister of War and the Minister of the Colonies, adopted the principal points of the Government scheme for the creation of a colonial army.

The new United States Army Bill, which has just passed the Senate, provides for very drastic and far-reaching changes. One of these is the abolition of the regimental organisation of the artillery, and providing for an artillery corps consisting of two branches, to be known as coast and field artillery. The corps as proposed will require 17,448 men, formed into 126 batteries of coast artillery and 18 batteries of field artillery. The Bill also creates a veterinary corps for the army, consisting of a colonel and thirty-five other commissioned officers. The new measure revives the grade of Lieutenant-General for the commander of the Army, and makes it permanent.

SOME LESSONS OF THE WAR.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—We must all deplore the present war, but if we duly appreciate and profit by the lessons which it has taught us, the sacrifices which we have made, and are making, will not be in vain. It has shown us that so far as military preparedness for eventualities are concerned we have been living in a fool's paradise, and that by adhering to a system of organisation which half a century ago was proved to be imperfect, and by not altering our tactics and drill in a manner that would accord with the changes and improvements that have been made in firearms of all calibres, we have been blindly exposing our men to probable defeat. It is now the anxious desire of the nation to alter all this, and it is right that we should do so promptly. It is evident that the numerical strength of our Army is not sufficient and it is also equally clear that means must be adopted to induce, or if needs be, to compel, the more intelligent classes to contribute their share towards the actual defence of their homes. I shall not, however, at present deal with this question which is being so largely discussed, but I would like to say a few timely words about the training of our soldiers.

The present war has taught us many lessons, but of those which we should take to heart, the most urgent is the proved fact that quality is of more importance than quantity. In other words, that a few really skilled riflemen of good physique, like the colonials, used to horses, are more than a match for a host of men who lack those qualifications. The reasons why this is the case are very obvious—

1. A few expert riflemen can find cover, where a greater number would be exposed, and if they are scattered over a considerable area, their enemies are unable to localise them, or even to ascertain the exact direction from which they deliver their deadly fire.

2. The effectiveness of rifle fire, which is now delivered at ranges exceeding 1,000 yards, does not in any appreciable degree depend upon the number of shots fired, but almost solely upon the accuracy with which it is aimed.

3. A few really good shots placed in suitable positions can with magazine rifles deliver a very rapid fire, and being themselves in comparative security, they can exercise their skill with cool, deadly, and discriminating effect, as we have lately found to our cost in our very serious loss of officers in every engagement. I would therefore offer a few suggestions as to how we can in this one respect make our small Army more efficient.

1. Let accuracy of rifle shooting be of paramount importance in the training of every infantry and mounted infantry soldier.

2. Let every soldier fire a much larger number of rounds of ammunition at known distances and fixed targets, and at unknown distances and disappearing targets, per annum, under skilled instruction.

3. As it is essential that as many men as possible should become skilled shots and take an interest in their shooting, those who prove their efficiency in that respect should receive extra pay.

4. It is very desirable that the best shots in every regiment should be formed into two flank companies, so as to be available for every special purpose for which accuracy of shooting might be needed.

5. From the flank companies above mentioned 20 of the best shots should be formed into a small company of "sharpshooters," who should be armed with rifles of exceptional range and accuracy, fitted, with telescope sights, and every appliance calculated to ensure superior accuracy at long ranges. These men should receive considerably more pay than their less skilled comrades, so as to make it an object of ambition to every soldier in the regiment to obtain admission into this Corps d'Elite. This would have the immediate effect of improving the shooting of every man in the battalion. These men would be found most useful for such special duties as the silencing of the enemy's artillery and machine guns, picking off the enemy's riflemen, firing into embrasures, and, generally speaking, for the many special services in which perfect accuracy of fire at extreme ranges is necessary.

6. In considering these suggestions it may be said that every soldier should be taught to shoot with accuracy, but those who have had experience in such matters are well aware that a very large proportion of otherwise eligible recruits cannot, owing to constitutional temperament or want of power of vision, be ever made to shoot with that accuracy which should be the attribute and ambition of every rifleman, and on this latter point I would suggest that recruits, so far as it is possible, should be enlisted for general service, so that such as could not be taught to shoot might be relegated to the A.S.C., the A.P.D., and R.A.M.C., and other military corps and departments where they could perform good and very necessary duties, but where skill in shooting was not an essential qualification.

THE SUPPLY OF AMMUNITION IN THE FIELD.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In letters I have received from officers in South Africa regret is expressed that the arrangements for the supply of ammunition in the field have been so faulty. Some years ago I happened to be adjutant of a battalion in which an equipment was submitted for trial, the invention of an army medical officer, Oliver by name. From the commanding officer downwards to the men in the ranks everybody thought well of the system. One great merit was that the weight was evenly balanced and that it enabled the men to unclasp their belts and march in perfect freedom and comfort in hot weather. Another was that without increasing the burden—the straps and pouches were so arranged—a man could go into action carrying 150 rounds of ammunition on his person. To my great astonishment, and that of all with whom I was at that time associated, this excellent system was not adopted; but one was accepted which possessed none of its merits, and has been reported upon in very strong terms of condemnation by general after general. Had a wise discretion been exercised at the time of which I speak, what a blessing it would have been to our generals in the field in South Africa. As one of them says in a letter before me there would certainly have been fewer prisoners of war in Pretoria, and the action of Spion Kop would, there is every reason to believe, have been a success; for men with 150 rounds of ammunition each could have held their own pending the arrival of reinforcements. As it is, our generals in despatches refer to the disadvantages under which they have laboured. Some say the rifle is at fault; some are suggesting an arrangement in bandoliers. If those in authority at the time to which I refer had only recognised that a war with the Boers was inevitable and that the ammunition question was an all-important consideration, their decision would, I venture to think, have been reversed and the result to-day might be different. I simply write this to show how easy it is for the best intentioned officials to make mistakes and how serious the consequences might be when they do. —LIEUTENANT-COLONEL.

THE VOLUNTEER RESERVE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—It would appear that in the War Office scheme for creating a Reserve of Volunteers, two branches of the service have been overlooked. I refer to the engineers and artillery, to which the proposed scheme would scarcely apply, as the facilities for firing a certain number of rounds of rifle ammunition would not add greatly to the efficiency of the sapper and gunner when he rejoined his old corps. I also think that a mistake has been made in making a six years' qualification necessary. It would have been very much better to have reduced this, and encouraged the men of these two branches to attend the annual trainings instead of firing at the ranges. It has to be remembered that a very large number of recruits to the Volunteer artillery and engineers, especially the latter, are composed of young men serving their apprenticeships of three or four years in engineering works, during which time they can well devote the necessary time to their drills, &c. After that they are frequently moved to another neighbourhood where there is probably no branch of their particular service. They are, therefore, lost so far as their effectiveness is concerned, as all the rifle shooting in the world will not make them of much value when called to rejoin their corps, whereas a large number of these men, if given facilities, would attend the annual training, and thus keep in touch with all they have learnt. In the case of officers the scheme is still more inapplicable. The writer, for example, was four years in Volunteer Submarine Miners, during which time he spent two months at Chatham and got his p.s.; but under the scheme he is not qualified to join the Reserve. I venture to think that a large number of ex-Volunteer officers would gladly give a week or more a year for the purposes of training, as many men resign their commissions not on account of training obligations but owing to the constant attention that they have to give to corps matters during the remainder of the year. In some corps drills are going all the year round, and officers are naturally expected to be present. The obligation tells enormously on their time, hence many resignations. —EX-VOLUNTEER.

PROMOTION R.A. AND R.E.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Several weeks have elapsed since Mr. Wyndham, replying to a question in the House of Commons, stated that the Secretary of State for War had under consideration the question of accelerating the promotion of second lieutenants in the scientific corps, whose grievances he recognised. Nothing has been done, however, to carry that promise into effect, and the second lieutenants of those corps are being superseded in every Gazette.

Take, for example, the two following instances from the Gazette of the 20th ult. :—

Royal Fusiliers.—2nd Lieut. F. Moore. (Appointed Jan. 4, 1899).

King's Royal Rifles.—2nd Lieut. Hon. A. Harris. (Appointed Feb. 25, 1899).

And there are hundreds of similar ones, to say nothing of Militia, Imperial Yeomanry, and Volunteers.

Fully a hundred of the senior second lieutenants in the Artillery and Engineers have over two years' service, and, when two years at Woolwich are added to that, they have something like four years' military training.

Some years ago, the promotion in the two scientific corps being abnormally slow, the three years' system was introduced, but it was intended as a "maximum" and not a "minimum" duration of serving as a second lieutenant. It was never meant that Artillery or Engineer subalterns should not receive the benefit of any quick promotion happening, as well as their brother "subs" in Line regiments, but the War Office official has treated the question in the usual red tape, narrow-minded manner we have so long been accustomed to, the consequence being that a number of young officers are very unfairly treated.

I am glad to notice that your columns contain many letters on the subject, and trust that, attention being called to it, the injustice will be remedied. SPECTATOR.

Junior Carlton Club, S.W.

It has been decided that the Queen's Regulation which prohibits Army Officers on full pay from joining the directorate of public or other companies without War Office sanction shall be held in abeyance as regards those officers who have rejoined from the reserve of officers or retired list and officers of the Militia.

WAR SUMMARY.

Saturday, May 26.

A despatch was received at the War Office during the afternoon from Lord Roberts announcing the invasion of the Transvaal, the advanced portion of the army under his lordship's command having crossed the Vaal on the Queen's Birthday (Thursday) near Parys. Lord Roberts further stated that there were none of the enemy on the south side of the Vaal. The despatch was dated from Wolvehoek. At the time it was sent off Gen. Ian Hamilton's column was at Boschbank, and our scouts at Viljoen.

It appears from accounts now to hand that Lord Roberts's strategic redistribution of his front completely upset the calculations of the enemy, who, with 4,000 men, were expecting Gen. Hamilton at Englebrech Drift. In the meantime, Col. Henry's Mounted Infantry, with the Bedfordshire Yeomanry and Lumsden's Horse, pushed across the Vaal at Viljoen's Drift, after some skirmishing among the coal mines, and Col. Henry occupied Vereeniging at mid-day.

Lieut.-Gen. French with the cavalry crossed the Vaal yesterday, at Lindiques Drift.

The splendid handling of the forces by Lord Roberts completely outmanoeuvred the Boers, who are said to have been "thunderstruck at the rapidity of his advance, and the marvellous manner in which all columns conform to the general movement."

On the Natal side Lieut.-Gen. Hildyard's Division marched into Newcastle to-day. The railway had been repaired as far as Ingagane.

The secretary of the Imperial Yeomanry Committee received from Sir Ralph Knox, on behalf of Lord Lansdowne, a letter intimating the release of the committee from its arduous duties, and expressing very warm appreciation both of the services rendered by the committee and of the bravery and efficiency of the Imperial Yeomanry in the field.

Sunday, May 27.

Lord Roberts announced to-day after Church Parade that the Orange Free State had been annexed.

Monday, May 28.

Lord Roberts's main body arrived to-day within 18 miles of Johannesburg. Telegraphing from Klip River at 5.30 the Commander-in-Chief said the troops had covered 20 miles during the day. The enemy had prepared several positions for defence but abandoned them one after the other as our men approached. They were followed up so closely that they had only just time to entrain their five guns at Klip River as the West Australian Mounted Infantry dashed in. The farmers on the line of advance were all surrendering their arms and horses, "only too delighted," accounts say, "to be freed from the yoke of Kruger and Steyn, who they all now recognise have been keeping the war going by means of lies and misrepresentations to further their own selfish ends. This opinion is expressed freely on all sides. The women speak even more strongly than the men, and receive our troops in the light of men who have come to save them and their families from tyranny."

A proclamation was issued at Cape Town to-day formally annexing the Orange Free State to her Majesty's dominions under the title of the Orange River State.

The annexation ceremony took place at noon in the market square, Bloemfontein, being conducted in the presence of a large concourse of residents and troops. The town was gay with bunting. The club premises and balcony were crowded with ladies, among whom were Lady and the Misses Roberts, the Countess of Airlie and Lady Settrington. The troops were drawn up in the square under the command of Major-Gen. Knox. Pending the arrival of the Governor, Major-Gen. Pretymann, the massed bands of the 6th Division entertained the spectators with a programme of music. The Governor and staff, accompanied by Lieut.-Gen. Kelly-Kenny and staff, arrived shortly after noon. His escort was formed by a contingent of the Welsh Yeomanry. After a general salute had been given, Gen. Pretymann, in a clear voice that was heard all over the square, read Lord Roberts's proclamation annexing the Orange Free State, which had been conquered by her Majesty's forces, to the Queen's dominions, and declaring that the State would henceforth be known as the Orange River Colony. As the Governor finished reading the proclamation cheers were raised, and these increased in volume when Lord Acheson unfurled the Royal Standard and the band struck up "God Save the Queen." All present joined in the National Anthem. Cheers were then given for the Queen, Lord Roberts, and the British Army, and a salute of twenty-one guns was fired.

Tuesday, May 29.

Lord Roberts arrived during the afternoon at Germiston, ten miles from Johannesburg, a junction connecting that town with Natal, Pretoria, and Klerksdorp. The troops were not expected until Wednesday, and consequently the rolling stock had not been carried off. The advance was virtually unopposed. This intelligence was notified to the War Office in a telegram dated Germiston, 6.30 p.m. Gen. Sir Redvers Buller issued a proclamation at Newcastle:—

"The troops of Queen Victoria are now passing through the Transvaal. Her Majesty does not make war on individuals, but is, on the contrary, anxious to spare them as far as may be possible the horrors of war. The quarrel England has with the Government and not with the people of the Transvaal. Provided they remain neutral, no attempt will be made to interfere with persons living near the line of march. Every possible protection will be given them, and any of their property that it may be necessary to take will be paid for. On the other hand, those who are thus allowed to remain near the line of march must respect and maintain their neutrality, and residents of any locality will be held responsible, both in person and property, if any damage is done to the railway or telegraph, or if any violence is done to any member of the British forces in the vicinity of their homes."

There was fighting to-day outside Johannesburg. Lieut.-Gen. French had been directed to go to the north of the town, near the road to Pretoria, and Lieut.-Gen. Ian Hamilton was sent round to the west in support. At one o'clock in the afternoon he found the enemy strongly posted three miles south of the Rand, with artillery. The British attacked at once. The 1st Batn. Gordon Highlanders, on the right, captured one end of a ridge, and wheeling round cleared it of the enemy, in spite of an obstinate resistance; and the City of London Imperial Volunteers fought with equal determination and success on the opposite flank. The result was to complete the encirclement of the town. Gen. Hamilton occupied Florida, to the west; Gen. French's Cavalry were a few miles off to the north-east; Gen. Gordon's Cavalry Brigade, the Mounted Infantry, and the 7th Division held the heights to the north; and the 11th Division, with the Headquarters and the heavy Artillery, were stationed on the south. Gen. Ian Hamilton speaks in high praise of the manner in which Major-Gen. Bruce-Hamilton and Lieut.-Col. Spens, Shropshire Light Infantry, handled the men under Major-Gen. Smith-Dorrien's direction.

Telegrams from Gen. Rundle's camp report a heavy engagement with the Boers, eight miles east of Senekal. The enemy, with some artillery, made a plucky stand, but Rundle was entirely successful in his object of relieving Sprague, and ensuring the occupation of Lindley.

Wednesday, May 30.

Sir Redvers Buller telegraphed at 11 a.m. that the enemy having formed a laager at Dornberg, passed his right rear on Sunday, giving much annoyance to our troops. He therefore directed a force under Lieut.-General Hildyard to proceed by Woolf's Drift on Utrecht, whilst another under Lieut.-General Lyttelton went by Thanga Drift on Dornberg. Gen. Hildyard had reached Utrecht and the place had surrendered. At the time the despatch was sent Lieut.-General Clery was bombarding Laing's Nek, but the enemy were said to be disheartened. They were not in strong positions, and Gen. Buller doubted if they would show fight. The railway was open to Newcastle.

A flag of truce was sent into Johannesburg during the morning by Lord Roberts, and, in response, Commandant Krause paid a visit in person to the British Headquarters. He made a formal surrender, but requested that the entry should be deferred for twenty-four hours, as many armed burghers were still inside. To this Lord Roberts assented, being anxious to avoid a disturbance at the time of occupation. Moreover, the hills in the immediate neighbourhood were still held by bodies of the enemy, whom it was necessary to disperse.

Thursday, May 31.

Lord Roberts wired from Johannesburg shortly after five p.m.:—"Her Majesty's troops are now in possession of Johannesburg, and the British flag floats over the Government buildings."

Private dispatches reached London stating that the mines were all safe.

Friday, June 1.

Up to the hour of going to press no official confirmation had reached us of the surrender of Pretoria.

and the precise situation there remained in doubt. The Earl of Rosslyn, special correspondent of the Daily Mail, telegraphed from Pretoria on Wednesday at 11.40 a.m., and to this effect:—

"Pretoria will be occupied in about two hours' time to-day, May 30, without resistance. The President has gone to Waterval Boven. Burgomaster de Souza is authorised to receive the British. He, with an influential committee of citizens, including Chief Justice Gregorowski, Mr. Samuel Marks, and Mr. Loveday, have been appointed to preserve life and property during the interregnum. Everything is quiet, but crowds are waiting expectantly in the Church Square for the arrival of the British. Fearing possible disturbances and bloodshed among the prisoners of war at Waterval, Mr. Hay, the American Consul, and Mr. Leigh Wood, insisted upon twenty officers being liberated on parole to go to the men. Their action cannot be too highly praised. I was permitted to accompany the officers. Everything was quiet. I have just returned.—ROSSLYN."

Reuter's Agent wired on same day:—

"The British advance-guard is half-way between Johannesburg and Pretoria. A force is also reported at Hatherly.—All the forces have been dismissed from the forts round Pretoria. At a public meeting called by the burgomaster this morning, a committee, consisting of Judge Gregorowski, Nel, Charles Marais, Loveday, De Villiers, Zeederberg, Bosch, Vanderbyl, F. Eloff and F. Grobler, was appointed to keep order. The President is now at Waterval Boven."

The Central News during the evening published a telegram to the effect that the United States Ambassador had received two telegrams from the American Consul at Pretoria. One stated that Lord Cecil Manners arrived as a prisoner at Pretoria yesterday (Thursday), and was at once liberated. According to the other message, Lord Rosslyn was liberated on Wednesday. Lord Cecil Manners and Lord Rosslyn were both well in health.

The Mansion House War Fund was stated to have reached the sum of £919,000.

DISTRESSED GENTLEFOLKS' AID ASSOCIATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—While we are rightly subscribing large sums for the relief and comfort of our brave officers and men nobly fighting for us at the front, there are others at home who have also done good service and risked their lives for their country in past years and who now need our aid. Some of these we have been able to relieve; men no longer young, who, through no fault of their own, find themselves in circumstances of distress. We venture to plead with your readers on behalf of one who is specially in need of sympathy and help.

Captain — entered the Army in 1855, and served with great credit at home and abroad till 1872, and holds testimonials of the highest character from his superior officers. He would never have left the Army, to whose service he was devoted, but was compelled to sell out as the only means of helping a widowed mother and orphan sister who had lost all their landed and funded property through the misconduct of a relative. He is now 66 years of age and suffering from a painful complaint which makes it difficult for him to earn a living. The facts are all vouched for by ourselves and others who have known him many years, and we shall be thankful to administer whatever may be sent to us for his benefit.

We have also other military and naval cases, needing our help, and any contributions which well-wishers can send us we will apply to any special case or the general purposes of the association as may be desired.

W. W. KNOLLYS, Colonel.

23, Comeragh Road, West Kensington.

THE annual meeting of the Royal Naval Scripture Readers' Society was held at Church House on the 22nd ult., the Rev. Prebendary Eardley-Wilmot being in the chair. The Chaplain of the Fleet spoke of the great assistance given to him by the Readers at Devonport, Walmer, and Sheerness. Capt. Poulton, Commanders Dawson and Thresher, and Revs. Kenah and Brabazon, R.N., also commended the work. Admiral Sir F. L. McClintock, K.C.B., thanked the chairman. The Society needs increased support, as its income has diminished greatly during the past year.

An influential meeting called together by the Earl of Bandon, K.P., Lord-Lieutenant of the County of Cork, was held in Cork on Saturday last to consider arrangements for starting a branch of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Help Society in Cork County. Among the speakers were Lord Bandon, Rear-Admiral Lake, the Lord Mayor of Cork, the City Sheriff, the Bishop of Cork, Sir George Colthurst, and Mr. Clery, brother of Sir Francis Clery. The chair was taken by Major-Gen. Hugh McCalmont, C.B., commanding the Cork Military District. It is satisfactory to find leading civilians supporting a society which is being everywhere thoroughly organised in preparation for the influx of ex-soldiers with which the country will be flooded after the war.

Knowllys, and Mr. Austin Low.

Messrs. Gruber & Co., 2, Ridgemount Street, W.C., have just produced the Kipling Poem Souvenir, with the object of helping the Kipling Poem Fund. The souvenir is a work of art, and has been executed with that care for which the firm is well known. On the one side is a reproduction of Mr. Rudyard Kipling's famous poem, on the other Mr. Caton Woodville's picture, "A Gentleman in Kharki." It is enclosed in a frame of artistic design, and the token itself is fitted with a swivel, so that either side can be turned to the front. The souvenir ought to command an extensive sale, and seems specially adapted to the purposes of military bazaars.

In consequence of the many vacancies caused by the recall of Regular non-commissioned officers from the permanent staff of the Auxiliary Forces for more pressing duty in the field or at home, it has been decided that the services of ex-soldiers re-enlisted for the Royal Reserve Battalions may be used for filling actual (but not temporary) vacancies on the permanent staff of Militia, Yeomanry, and Volunteers; also for acting in the vacancies at regimental and Royal Artillery depôts caused by the withdrawal on embodiment of orderly-room clerks. Non-commissioned officers for Infantry permanent staff may be obtained either direct from the Royal Reserve battalions or by re-enlisting non-commissioned officers who were surplus to the requirements of the Royal Reserve, and who therefore have not yet been accepted for re-enlistment.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN STAR.

The new decoration for the South African operations has now been finally approved. It is in the form of a five-pointed star, with a centre of gold. This is surrounded by a ring of bronze. On this ring the words "South Africa" appear in raised letters. Exactly in the centre is a delicately-wrought portrait of her Majesty. In size the medal is of the same proportions as the Khedival Star of 1881. The ribbon is of four colours. A stripe of khaki forms the middle. There are also two of white and one each of red and blue. We give a sketch of the decoration.

THE KOORN SPRUIT DISASTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—A good deal of nonsense is talked and written about this. Amongst other things it is frequently called "a rear guard action." What are the facts? A column commanded by Gen. Broadwood was formed in the usual manner, advanced and rear guards, and no doubt inspected and passed by the staff. Soon after it started Gen. Broadwood, finding the enemy in force, decides to retire. The advanced guard becomes the rear guard, and certainly fought no action. When Gen. Broadwood decided to retire he sent a messenger to Lord Roberts asking for help, and this messenger reached headquarters in the afternoon. As the road was clear, was not Gen. Broadwood justified in concluding reinforcements would soon join him? The original rear-guard became an advanced guard, and must in the nature of things have had the usual advanced files and flanking parties; but no doubt the commander did not pay sufficient attention to the Boers to be seen galloping on the flanks; doubtless he considered they would fall victims to the reinforcing troops. Worse blunders have been committed than this, the author of which is so mercilessly hounded down by the Press.

ARMY.

Col. Thomas Andrews Rawlins, Captain Retired List, late 41st and 86th Regiments and Netley Staff, died at Clifton on the 30th ult., aged 75. The third son of the late Rev. H. W. Rawlins, Rector of Fiddington, Somersetshire, he joined the Army Nov. 7, 1841; became Lieutenant Dec. 29, 1843; Captain Feb. 3, 1847; Major Oct. 26, 1858; Lieutenant-Colonel Jan. 10, 1870, and Colonel March 26, 1873.

Major Henry Frank Egbert Lucas, retired list late 3rd Dragoon Guards, died at Dunchidock House, Devon, on the 27th ult., aged 54. He joined the Army Nov. 20, 1864; became Lieutenant Nov. 11, 1868; Captain Nov. 29, 1876; Major July 29, 1885; retiring on retired pay in that rank.

Major Antonio Stephen Ralli, 12th Lancers, died at Kroonstad on the 26th ult., of enteric fever. Born May 5, 1861, he was eldest surviving son of Mr. A. S. Ralli, 32, Park Lane, W., and joined the 16th Lancers as 2nd Lieutenant Aug. 11, 1880; was transferred to the 12th Lancers Dec. 18, 1880; became Lieutenant July 1, 1881; Captain Jan. 1, 1888; and Major Dec. 21, 1896.

Major James Alexander Orr-Ewing, late 16th Lancers, commanding the Warwickshire Company of the Imperial Yeomanry, has been killed in action in South Africa. The third son of the late Sir Archibald Orr-Ewing, he was born in 1857, and educated at Harrow and Trinity College, Cambridge. He joined the 16th Lancers in 1880, and served successively on the staff of three Lords Lieutenant of Ireland: the Earl of Carnarvon, the Marquis of Londonderry, and the Marquis of Zetland, and on that of Lord Roberts while Commander-in-Chief of Ireland. In 1898 Major Orr-Ewing married Lady Margaret, eldest daughter of the seventh Duke of Roxburghe.

Major Henry Shelley Dalbiac, late R.A., commanding a company of Middlesex Yeomanry, 11th Battalion Imperial Yeomanry, was killed in the fighting outside Senekal while with Sir Leslie Rundle's force on the 25th ult. Major Dalbiac was the eldest son of Mr. Henry Eardley Aylmer Dalbiac, of Durrington Manor, Worthing, Sussex, and elder brother of Col. Dalbiac, M.P., for North Camberwell. He was born June 30, 1850. In August 1871, he entered the Royal Artillery, in which corps he became Captain in May 1881; he served in the following year in the Egyptian War, and was present at the battle of Tel-el-Kebir, where he was severely wounded (mentioned in despatches, medal with clasp, the Khedive's star, and 4th class of the Medjidie). He retired from the Army as a Major in 1887, and was gazetted a Captain in the Imperial Yeomanry on Feb. 3 last.

Major Francis Edward Cooper, R.A., died at Mooi River Hospital, Natal, on the 26th ult. of enteric fever. Born May 12, 1859, eldest son of the Right Hon. E. H. Cooper, of Markree Castle, Collooney, Ireland, he joined the Royal Artillery Dec. 12, 1878; became Captain Oct. 16, 1886; and Major Oct. 29, 1896. He had passed through the Staff College; was Staff Captain North-Western District, 1889-92; A.D.C. North-Western District, 1892-95; on the staff of the Intelligence Department, 1897-99; and gave up his appointment in order to accompany Sir F. Clery to the seat of war as A.D.C. He served in the Egyptian War, 1882, including the battle of Tel-el-Kebir (medal with clasp and bronze star).

Major Henry Montague Browne, 1st Batn. East Lancashire Regiment, died at Bloemfontein on the 23rd ult., of enteric fever. Born Nov. 19, 1857, he joined the 30th Regiment as 2nd Lieutenant Sept. 14, 1878; became Lieutenant Feb. 12, 1881; Captain July 1, 1887; and became Major Nov. 13, 1899. He served in the Chitral Expedition 1895 (medal with clasp).

Capt. Lennox Christian Livingstone-Learmonth, R.H.A., died at Bloemfontein on the 25th ult., of enteric fever. Born Dec. 5, 1870, the eldest son of the late Mr. A. J. Livingstone-Learmonth, and Mrs. Livingstone-Learmonth, of Hanford, Blandford, he was one of six brothers, three of whom are now serving in South Africa. He joined the Army as 2nd Lieutenant July 25, 1890; became Lieutenant July 25, 1893; and Captain Feb. 13, 1900.

Capt. Archibald Galbraith Scott, late Royal Artillery, died at Clippens House, Renfrewshire, on the 27th ult., aged 38 years. He joined the Army Feb. 22, 1882, and becoming Captain April 26, 1890, afterwards retired.

Capt. Neville George Harry Turner, 2nd Batn. Duke of Wellington's Regiment died at Winburg on the 25th ult., of enteric fever. Born Dec. 20, 1864, he entered the Army from the Militia as Lieutenant

Dec. 8, 1886; and became Captain Nov. 2, 1895. Shortly before the breaking out of the war he had been nominated as Aide-de-Camp to the Governor of Madras.

Capt. Samuel Tomyns Sargent, late 43rd Light Infantry, died at Lismore, Newton Abbot, on the 28th ult., aged 68.

Capt. Ralph Nevile Fane, 4th Batn. North Staffordshire Regiment, died at Wynberg Hospital, South Africa, on the 27th ult., of enteric fever. He was the youngest son of the late Col. Francis Fane, of Fulbrook, and was serving with his own battalion in the field.

Capt. James M. Middlemist, 3rd Batn. Seaforth Highlanders, is officially reported to have died at Kumasi on the 6th ult., of fever. He had proceeded to the Ashanti capital as Deputy Inspector-General, Gold Coast Constabulary, and arrived there before the troubles assumed a serious aspect. He joined the Colonial Service in July 1892.

Capt. St. John Meyrick, 1st Batn. Gordon Highlanders, was killed while fighting with Lieut.-Gen. Ian Hamilton's force near Johannesburg on the 30th ult. Born Aug. 4, 1866, the second son of Sir Thomas Meyrick, C.B., first Baronet, of Bush, Pembrokehire, he was educated at Eton and Trinity Hall, Cambridge, and entered the Gordon Highlanders from the Militia Dec. 29, 1886. He was an extra Aide-de-Camp to Lord Houghton when Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, from Oct., 1892, to July, 1895, and to Earl Cadogan from July, 1895, to Oct., 1897. He obtained his company Jan. 11, 1897.

Lieut. the Hon. John David Hamilton, 12th Lancers, died at Kroonstad on the 22nd ult., of enteric fever. Born Dec. 23, 1878, he joined the Army as 2nd Lieutenant 12th Lancers, Nov. 16, 1898; and became Lieutenant Feb. 24 last.

Lieut. Cyril Slater, 3rd Batn. East Lancashire Regiment, serving with the Gold Coast Constabulary, has been killed in action in the operations in Ashanti. He took up employment under the Colonial Office in June, 1899.

Lieut. Edwyn Harland, Hampshire Regiment, on special service, was killed in the relief of Mafeking. Born July 6, 1872, he joined the Hampshire Regiment in July, 1892, and obtained his Lieutenancy June 21, 1894. He was engaged in 1891 with the Mounted Infantry in the operations in South Africa (medal). He was appointed Adjutant of his regiment in June 1899, but a month later was seconded for special service in South Africa, where he had again been serving with the Mounted Infantry.

Lieut. Hugh Wharton Fife, 2nd Batn. Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, was killed in action in the fighting near Johannesburg on the 30th ult. Born Dec. 16, 1870, he joined the Service as 2nd Lieutenant April 26, 1893, and was promoted to Lieutenant Aug. 31, 1896.

Lieut. John Douglas Dalrymple Hay, 1st Batn. Gordon Highlanders, died at Bloemfontein on the 26th ult., of enteric fever. He was the only surviving son of James Francis Dalrymple Hay, of Dunlop, Ayrshire, N.B. Born on August 5, 1874, he entered the Gordon Highlanders from the Militia, Sept. 16, 1896; and served in the campaign on the North-West Frontier of India under the late Gen. Sir William Lockhart in 1897-98 with the 1st Batn. of his regiment, and was present at the action at Dargai on Oct. 18, and at the assault of the Dargai Heights two days later, as also at the capture of the Sampagha and Arhanga Passes, and in the subsequent operations in the Maidan, Waran, and Bara Valleys (medal with two clasps). He obtained his Lieutenancy Nov. 4, 1898.

2nd Lieut. Arthur Charles Septimus Fletcher, 1st Batn. Royal Irish Regiment, died at Bloemfontein on the 24th ult. of enteric fever. He only joined the Army from the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, on January 20 last.

2nd Lieut. William Henry Amedron, 3rd Batn. South Wales Borderers, died at Boshof on the 25th ult., of enteric fever. He was appointed to a commission Jan. 17 last, and at once proceeded with his battalion on active service.

2nd Lieut. William Middleton Noel Noel, 2nd Batn. Gloucestershire Regiment, died at Bloemfontein on the 20th ult., of enteric fever. He was eldest son of Col. W. F. Noel, R.E., who has been Colonel on the Staff, R.E., Natal, since the outbreak of the war. Born in 1880, Lieut. Noel was educated at Cheltenham, and received his commission in the Gloucestershire Regiment in January last.

2nd Lieut. Percy C. Shaw, 3rd Batn. Royal Munster Fusiliers, died at Bloemfontein on the 28th ult., of enteric fever. He received his commission Oct. 18 last, and shortly afterwards left with his battalion for the front.

THE FORCES OF SOUTH AUSTRALIA. (WITH COLOURED SUPPLEMENT.)

The Colonial troops have come very prominently to the front in the course of the present war, and every general in the field has been ready to acknowledge their fine qualities and their particular suitability for campaigning in such countries as South Africa. The Australian colonies were roused to great patriotic zeal after the unfortunate action of December 15, and by the call made by the Government for Colonial volunteers. In all the capitals, citizens vied with one another in their readiness to provide funds, and an unsuspected source of strength was discovered in the existing military organisations. Contingent after contingent left the shores of Australia and New Zealand amid scenes of unprecedented enthusiasm, and when the proposal was made for the formation of the Bushmen's Imperial Corps, the Colonies regarded the force from a federal point of view, and went to work energetically together.

In Adelaide, as elsewhere, this loyal spirit was manifested. The forces of South Australia are by no means so extensive as those of New South Wales and Victoria, but the Colonists have always shown great interest in soldiering, and the various local corps have displayed much military zeal and attained a considerable degree of efficiency. The largest force in the Colony is that of the Mounted Rifles, but another popular infantry corps is found in the Adelaide Rifles. There is also a force of artillery, of which Lord Tennyson, the Governor and Commander-in-Chief, and Major-General M. F. Downes, C.M.G., are honorary Colonels, and the permanent and Field Artillery have always been reported as efficient and have drawn to them a large amount of public interest.

The South Australian contingent of Mounted Infantry in South Africa was engaged in the arduous fighting about Arundel and Colesberg in December and January, and when General French's forces moved up to the Orange River station to do their excellent work in the relief of Kimberley and the invasion of the Orange Free State and the Transvaal, the South Australians were with them. In the course of these operations they have rendered a great deal of very useful service. They were with Lord Roberts at Bloemfontein, and were embodied in Colonel Henry's corps of General Hutton's Mounted Infantry Brigade. They have thus been associated with the other Australian troops and the Canadians and New Zealanders in very active work at the front. The Mounted Infantry have been prominent in Lord Roberts's advance and have many times distinguished themselves. It is, however, unnecessary in this place to repeat our account of their services. Our plate illustrating the uniform and character of the South Australian Regiments will be very popular at a time when the Colonial forces are much in the public mind. The South Australian Infantry with Lord Roberts are under the command of Captain F. H. Howland; and Captain G. R. Lascelles, Royal Fusiliers, is Captain and Adjutant of the corps.

The annual report of the Army and Navy Pensioners' Employment Society for 1899 was presented at the general meeting, over which Lieut.-Gen. Sir William Drysdale presided. The number of men provided for by the society last year was 2,585, an increase of nearly 350 on the return of the previous year. On account of the war, additional numbers of pensioners, some partly disabled, will soon be registered on the books. It is to be hoped, therefore, that the public will see their way to aiding the society with both subscriptions and donations, depending as it does almost entirely on the generosity of the friends of the services.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

On January 1st there were on the establishment of the army, 21 service batteries of horse artillery, and 92 batteries of field artillery. There are now 28 batteries of the former and 139 of the latter. When complete the field artillery will have just upon doubled itself within the past three years, clearly proving that the military members of the House of Commons were fully justified in saying that our army was considerably under-gunned.

Royal Scots Fusiliers (21st).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. and details moved yesterday from Glasgow to Barry Links. Capt. Stuart, 1st Batn., is acting as District Inspector of Musketry in Ireland. Capt. Lord Cassillis, 3rd Batn., left England on Saturday last in the Kildonan Castle, for South Africa.

Royal Welsh Fusiliers (23rd).—Major Lyle, D.S.O., and 2nd Lieut. Price, 1st Batn., left England in the Kildonan Castle on the 26th ult. for South Africa to join head-quarters. Capt. Throekmorton, 1st Batn., sailed from Cape Town on the 17th ult. for England, in the Canada, invalided.

South Wales Borderers (24th).—Major Hunter has passed the examination qualifying for the rank of Lieut.-Colonel.

King's Own Scottish Borderers (25th).—Lieut. Broadbent, 1st Batn., left Cape Town on the 21st ult. in the Simla, invalided. 2nd Lieut. Coulson left in the Canada on the 17th ult., also invalided.

Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers (27th).—Lieut. Evans left Cape Town on the 21st ult. in the Simla, invalided.

Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry (32nd).—Lieut. Hawker has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on medical certificate.

Hampshire Regiment (37th).—Capt. Jackson, D.S.O., has made his bow as an author; Messrs. Thacker, of Creed Lane, E.C., having published for him a most delightful little volume, "A Jaunt in Japan: or, Ninety Days' Leave in the Far East."

South Staffordshire Regiment (38th).—Capt. Buckle sailed from Cape Town for England on the 17th ult. in the Canada, invalided.

Dorsetshire Regiment (39th).—A memorial, which has been erected in the borough gardens at Dorchester to non-commissioned officers and men of the regiment who lost their lives during the Tirah Campaign, was unveiled on the 24th ult. by the Earl of Ilchester, Lord Lieutenant of Dorsetshire. The day was observed as a public holiday in the town. The ceremony was attended by the Mayor and Corporation in state. The memorial consisted of an obelisk of polished granite, on which is an inscription with the regimental badge and motto. On the base are the names of the soldiers who fell. Lord Ilchester and others spoke in eulogistic terms of the services of the regiment in the campaign, and particularly of Pte. Vickery, who won his V.C.

Black Watch (42nd).—Major Burton has passed the examination qualifying for the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel.

Oxfordshire Light Infantry (43rd).—In correction of the notice issued on Feb. 27 relative to Major Eveleigh, missing after the action of Waterval Drift, it is now notified that the officer in question, while proceeding to join his battalion in the 6th Division with a small convoy and escort, 22 strong, was surrounded by a large number of Boers, and after a gallant defence, during which one officer was killed and another mortally wounded, and one man killed and five wounded, was obliged to surrender. Lieut. Richards is a candidate for the Army Pay Department, and has joined at Aldershot on probation.

Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry (46th).—Major Wilbraham and Capt. Tremayne left England on Saturday last for South Africa on the Kildonan Castle to join headquarters.

Northamptonshire Regiment (48th).—Capt. Kenney-Herbert sailed from Cape Town on the 21st ult. in the Simla, invalided.

Royal West Kent Regiment (50th).—Capt. Simpson and Lieut. Greenwood have been granted leave from Aden to England for six months each, on medical certificate. Lieut. Hickson sailed from Cape Town on the 17th ult. for England in the Canada, invalided.

Northamptonshire Regiment (58th).—Capt. Allen sailed from Cape Town for England on the 17th ult. in the Canada, invalided.

King's Royal Rifles (60th).—Major Henniker, 4th Batn., left England on Saturday last for South Africa in the Kildonan Castle.

Manchester Regiment (63rd).—A draft for South Africa, consisting of one officer and 50 men of the 5th (Militia) Batn., was despatched last Saturday from Aldershot. On the previous day the draft was inspected by Major-Gen. Murray, C.B., A.D.C., who gave the men a few words of encouragement and advice, and requested Col. Bosworth, the commanding officer, to put in orders the fact that the G.O.C. was much pleased with the battalion generally, particularly in reference to the appearance and steadiness of the men on the Queen's birthday parade. The battalion now has five officers and 200 men at the front, one officer at the Curragh, two at the Depot, Ashton-under-Lyne, and one lent to the newly-formed Line Battalion to be acting Adjutant. Three subalterns were recently promoted to the 6th Battalion. The late sergeant-major has been transferred to one of the line battalions. Notwithstanding the extraordinary drain on officers, those who were seconded have been replaced; there is a full complement of field officers and captains, and the few existing vacancies for subalterns are being rapidly filled. Last year a very large proportion of the men volunteered for special service, and this year, on embodiment, the battalion volunteered to a man for service in South Africa. Lieut. Dunlop, 1st Batn., left Cape Town on the 21st ult. in the Simla, invalided.

Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders (91st).—2nd Lieut. Hazlerigg, 4th Batn., left Cape Town for England in the Canada on the 17th ult., invalided.

Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders (93rd).—Major Aitken has passed the examination qualifying for the rank of Lieut.-Colonel.

Royal Munster Fusiliers (101st).—Lieut.-Col. Evans sailed from Cape Town on the 21st ult. in the Simla, invalided; Lieut. Hall left on the 17th ult. in the Canada, also invalided.

Royal Dublin Fusiliers (102nd).—Lieuts. Molesworth and Halahan, 1st Batn.; and 2nd Lieut. Kinsman, 5th Batn., left Cape Town on the 21st ult. in the Simla, invalided.

Rifle Brigade.—A stained-glass window has been put into Fairlie parish church in memory of Lieut. the Hon Edward George Boyle, second son of the Earl of Glasgow. Lieut. Boyle, who was twenty-three years of age, served through the Khartoum Expedition, and died at Malta on Oct. 23, 1898, of fever contracted on active service.

Royal Northern Reserve Regiment.—Owing to the large number of men offering themselves for enlistment, a fourth battalion of the Royal Northern Counties Reserve Regiment is being formed.

Royal Irish Reserve Regiment.—The Duke of Connaught inspected the regiment on the 25th ult. at the Curragh. The parade was under the command of Lieut.-Col. Brooke. The Duke was received with a Royal salute, after which he inspected the regiment, which was drawn up in line. He questioned many of the men as to their past service, and took a great interest in the large numbers with medals. The regiment then marched past in column and quarter column, and having reformed into line advanced in review order, finishing with a Royal salute. The Duke called out the officers, and addressed each personally. In conclusion, he said it was quite a treat to see so many old soldiers, and requested Col. Brooke to inform the men that he was highly pleased with the progress they had made. He said he would see them again, and hoped they would pay as much attention to their musketry as they had apparently to their drill.

Army Service Corps.—Major French and Lieut. Mears left Cape Town on the 21st ult., invalided.

Royal Army Medical Corps.—Of all the Regimental and Corps Stalls at the National Bazaar held at the Royal Palace Hotel, Kensington, 24th to 26th May, not by any means least in tasteful decoration was the stall of the R. A. M. C., which was visited on the opening day by the Princess of Wales, who contributed some valuable and handsome articles to the stall, and also purchased generously from among the exhibits. The intake at the stall during the days of the sale reached a sum not far short of £200. The officers of the R. A. M. C. are much indebted to the ladies, married and single, who by their indefatigable exertions contributed so largely to the success of the stall. Majors Deeble and Wills, Capt. Erskine, and Lieut. Morris left Cape Town in the Simla on the 21st ult., for England.

LORD LANSDOWNE has written to the Lord Mayor of Liverpool stating that a scheme for the defence of the Mersey was adopted on the recommendation of his military advisers some time ago. The greater part has already been put into operation; the remainder is to be pushed on as rapidly as possible.

SALISBURY PLAIN.—The War Office have decided to provide accommodation for a large body of artillery on Salisbury Plain. With this view a comprehensive scheme for the erection of huts at Bulford has been approved. This scheme in no way affects the permanent barrack scheme lately decided upon in the vicinity of Blarindon Hill, Tedworth, as the plans for these more pretentious buildings are complete, and the concrete work for the capacious reservoir and the excavation of the latter have been already placed in the hands of a Bournemouth firm, who have commenced operations. A further development is that in connection with the railway facilities, and in this matter the light railway running from Ludgershall to Tedworth, a distance of two and a-half miles, is to be commenced almost immediately.

THE BISLEY MEETING.—The National Rifle Association has issued the prize list for the Bisley Meeting to be held next month. Exclusive of challenge cups and prizes in kind, nearly £11,000 is offered in the various competitions, about £9,700 being for contests in which only the Service rifle or carbine is used. The Queen's series offers a total of £2,420 in 600 prizes, ranging from the £250 given by her Majesty to 200 prizes of £1 each, half of the latter being for tyro shots. The Queen's will, as usual, be competed for in three stages during the second week of the meeting (July 16 to 21), at ranges from 200 to 1,000 yards, possession of the great honour of the meeting being decided on the last day. The prize meeting will this year open on Saturday, July 7, instead of on the following Monday, as heretofore, with the contest by Regular infantry company teams for the Evelyn Wood prizes, and the ordinary work of the meeting will begin on Monday, the 9th, instead of on the Tuesday.

Reviews.

THE FIRST PREMIER OF CAPE COLONY.

From many points of view it is a pity that The Life and Times of Sir John Charles Molteno, First Premier of Cape Colony, by P. A. Molteno, M.A. (Smith, Elder, 2 vols.), is a work so voluminous. The character of Sir John Molteno was representative in a strong degree of a type of South African personality, and he well deserves to be better known to English people. The temper of the times in which this somewhat bellicose politician worked still exists, and the history of representative institutions and responsible government at the Cape which these volumes include makes profitable reading. They contain a great deal of contentious matter, for it will be remembered that Sir John Molteno came into sharp conflict upon many points of military policy, and chiefly in regard to the command of the troops in South Africa, with Sir Bartle Frere. The author contends that the difficulties with which our statesmanship has to deal have been brought about by the operation of a policy conceived in ignorance of real conditions. There is a certain animus in the book against Sir Bartle Frere, and we do not think that some of the opinions expressed will command very wide approval. It was, perhaps, unnecessary, in defending Sir John Molteno's policy, to endeavour to discover the presumed defects of Sir Bartle Frere's character in his Indian service, as a despotic Governor of Bombay, to set up a contrast between him and Sir John Lawrence, and to expound his methods in the case of the Sultan of Zanzibar and his suggestions for dealing with difficulties in New Zealand. However, Mr. Molteno starts with the opinion that Sir Bartle Frere wanted sound judgment and careful discretion such as would have fitted him to deal with a real crisis, and he does not hesitate to ascribe to that officer the origin of a series of wars and disasters involving the ruin of thousands of natives and the death of many a brave man, as well as hatreds which have not yet subsided. Happily, it is possible not to hold this extreme view of Sir Bartle Frere's administration, and yet to respect the strong and honest character of the Cape Premier. He was a man of large mind and of broadly generous character, who did a great deal for Cape Colony. Generally he was ruled by strong common sense, and always acted in a most direct and straightforward manner, and with unlimited attention to the material development of the Colony. The colonists, both English and Dutch, reposed much confidence in him, and his policy throughout was to allay racial differences and to recognise no line of cleavage between the white races. His experience had been rather a hard one. After the Kaffir war, the "Lion of Beaufort," as he was called, was extremely bitter on account of the sufferings to which his men were subjected, and he conceived a whole-hearted distaste for the placing of Colonial forces under Imperial officers. His biographer gives several instances of the injudicious action of military officers to show how this particular sentiment grew. Sir Bartle Frere's view was that the natives were our fellow-subjects, and that our duty was to govern, protect, and improve, "not to slay them," and he desired, in pursuance of his steady policy, to have unhampered control of Imperial troops, whereas Sir John Molteno was for immediate, sharp, and decisive action, and thought that volunteers and burghers were much superior to regular military forces. Perhaps the author does not misrepresent the Governor's views when he says that the question at issue was Sir Bartle Frere's contention that the General was the only military executive officer, and therefore must command all troops whether Colonial or Imperial. This view was expressed in other terms to the Premier, and obviously the appointment of a Commandant-General, as intended by Molteno, to have command of Colonial forces in the field, independent of the Governor as Commander-in-Chief, and subordinate to him only as Governor in Council, seemed to present the danger of a possibly divided control. The Premier at the time of the Gaika and Galeka war objected to reinforcements of Imperial troops, always alleging that they were not necessary, and that the Colony could defend itself. Reinforcements, however, were expected, and it was seen that if the Governor's view should prevail they would be subject to him through the General, and that he might move them wherever he pleased without consulting his Ministers. It was really a constitutional question, and led to the dismissal of Mr. Molteno. Fortunately, the strained relations of the Governor and the ex-Premier ended pleasantly. They were two honest men of wholly different character and ideas, and Mr. Molteno's book, devoted largely to their relationships, is extremely instructive, and should be read by every one interested in the present conditions and future development of South Africa.

Besieged by the Boers (Hutchinson and Co.) is a volume by Dr. E. Oliver Ashe, who continued his practice at the Kimberley Hospital and in the town during the whole of the siege. Dr. Ashe has written a very entertaining book which gives a picture of the siege from day to day. He makes it clear how severe was the trial imposed upon the civilian population, living in a place besieged and bombarded by the enemy. It certainly was a very trying time, and all in the place worked loyally for the defence. In the opening chapters we read of the preparations made by the military authorities and of the zeal shown in embodying the town guard and other volunteer forces. Dr. Ashe has not, however, a very high opinion of the soldiers; at least, he betrays a certain irritation at what no doubt were the necessary regulations laid down for the government of the place. Personally he thought the officers very nice people, but, as a body, had "no doubt their creed was that Kimberley was made for the essential benefit of their regiment." It has often been observed that friction arises in places besieged, and we wish Dr. Ashe had been a little more temperate in some of his remarks. We have only to read his book to see what sterling work was done. To him the De Beers Company was a sort of Providence presiding over the place. It provided the electric searchlights, manufactured war material, looked after the water supplies, and provided shelter in extremities. The pictures accompanying the book are very interesting, and we commend the volume to those who would see Kimberley from within during the siege.

Messrs. Henry Graves and Co., of 6, Pall Mall announce the forthcoming issue of a photograph and mezzotint by Mr. W. Hester, of "the Hero of Mafeking," from the original by Mr. R. Caton Woodville. They invite subscriptions for the 1,500 remarque proofs, all that are to be issued, one half of the profits of the sale of which they will hand over to Lady Curzon's Mafeking Relief Fund. Major-Gen. Baden-Powell is represented in "siege" uniform, standing outside a dilapidated parapet, field glass in hand, with his terrier on his left and a gun in a kind of embrasure on his right, in an attitude of attention—"Is there anybody coming?"

We emphatically commend With Roberts to Pretoria (Newnes), an excellent and admirably illustrated account of the war, published at the price of one shilling.

We can commend a little volume, entitled Notes on Mess Management, by "P. M. C." (Simpkin and Co.), which is applicable alike to large and small messes.

"THE MORNING POST" says: "FASHION, the monthly periodical devoted to the costume of men, appeals to a special public, and meets its most exacting demands." "FASHION" (conducted and edited by Beau Brummel, Junr.) is published at 4, Argyll Street, Regent Street, London, W., and the yearly subscription, which may be started in any month, is 7s. 6d., payable in advance to the Manager. THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS says of FASHION: "Here is a periodical which sheds the light of wisdom upon masculine modes."

THE INVASION OF ENGLAND.

A RECENT writer has asserted that the word for war with England has gone out from the French General Staff, and the pessimistic notions in regard to the safety of this country which have been printed in the Navy League Journal have set some people abroad talking once more about the invasion of England. We have not the least desire to say that all is for the best in the British Navy, but we have always urged that steady progress is much better than the intermittent spurts which result from ill-timed or unreasonable scares. If we take General de la Roque and M. Claudinon, add to them the Chauvinistic utterances of the Anglophobe press in Paris, and crown the edifice with a choice selection of extracts from the excellent Navy League Journal we shall have wherewith to make some timid people very nervous at home. They cannot but be alarmed to be told that our reserve squadron is composed of battleships which would burn like tar-barrels, that the Channel squadron is denuded of cruisers, and that neither in the Channel nor the Mediterranean have we proper colliers or distilling ships for our needs. Moreover, the French are strengthening their Northern squadron, are reported to be about to mobilise 150,000 men in the north-west, and even to have chartered or bought a number of steam lighters from certain owners. After the exhibition, le déluge! We lately heard that the French had done even more than this, or were about to do it. They were about to employ all the fishing boats of the Channel for the purpose of transporting troops.

When we see a sober journal like the Army and Navy Journal of New York, lending its ear to such things, we are tempted to say that it is time to pause. The French Navy and the French mercantile marine are not, at the present time, in any state to enter upon such a perilous venture. To invade this country would be a stupendous task demanding a degree of rashness which we are unwilling to attribute either to the French War Office or the Ministry of Marine. What is essential for ourselves is that the ships which we are building should be rapidly completed, and that there should be no further delays in the execution of the shipbuilding programme. Such danger as there is arises from the inability of Governments, especially of French Governments, to control the impulses of peoples, and, though we do not believe that the French have the smallest chance of invading this country with success, it is just possible that some unfortunate episode might lead to strained relations and induce them to attempt it. Some writers are making much of the recent visit of M. de Lanessan to Lézardrieux, accompanied by Vice-Admiral Bienaimé, Chief of the Staff. The place lies at the mouth of the Trieux, and it is understood that the French propose to establish there a base for torpedo operations, such as might be supposed to promise something in the way of a brief command of the Channel. It is pointed out by writers who hold such views in France that this place is only 85 miles from Start Point, 100 miles from Plymouth, and 110 from Portsmouth. On the other hand, it is much further from those parts of our coast, which Napoleon had in view when he prepared the great flotilla.

It deserves to be noted that even French critics who might be credited with sounder knowledge have conceived from the course of operations in South Africa the view that our Army is altogether inefficient, and the promulgation of such notions among a people who have no chance of informing themselves is not without an element of danger. Even a writer of sagacity like M. Duquet, the historian of the Franco-German War, tells his countrymen that the operations in South Africa have been for us a disastrous revelation of the tactical and strategical weakness of our officers of all ranks, and of the comparative worthlessness of our troops. All we can say in regard to such matters is that this country must be ready, though we have always held, as we still do, that there exists no cause for quarrel between the two countries, and that their real interests are the same.

THE "BELLEISLE" EXPERIMENT.

UNTIL further information has been obtained of the interesting and instructive experiments to the Belleisle it is futile to speculate upon the results which may be their outcome. There are so many problems awaiting solution upon which these experiments should throw light that the publication of the particulars will be awaited with some anxiety. At present the only fact, a truly interesting one, as Mr. Goschen said on Monday, that has been revealed is that the ship did not take fire. That the announcement made by the First Lord took the public by surprise was due to the circumstance that without exception all the spectators on shore, including the correspondents of most of the London papers, supposed that the reverse was the case. They were misled, it appears, by seeing clouds of steam arising through a steam pipe being cut and lyddite shells as they burst in the water emitted clouds of smoke, again giving the impression of the ship being on fire. But while she was battered and her woodwork shattered in all directions, with the exception of a little smouldering fire in one of the cabins amongst some clothes, no ignition took place. Moreover, in spite of the battering which the ship received the fire pumps were uninjured, and for a long time continued to work flooding the decks. We have so often insisted in these columns upon the difference in discipline prevailing in our own Navy and in those from which the lessons of general conflagration have been drawn, that it is unnecessary for us to point out here how much this result of the Belleisle experiment tells in our favour. Nor does this result surprise us so much as it appears to have done some of our contemporaries. There were, both in the Chinese and in the Spanish vessels which were burnt at the Yalu and at Santiago respectively, certain conditions which would be absent in vessels of our Navy. Moreover, the construction of the Chinese ships, like that of some of the Spanish ships at Manila, favoured the spread of a fire, and as for the cruisers at Santiago, the Colon, it will be remembered, did not take fire at all, while in the case of the others the Spaniards have asserted that they smeared the decks with petroleum in order that whatever happened the ships should not fall into the enemy's hands. This is as it may be, but if the costly experiment carried out last Saturday taught us nothing else than what it has in this matter of inflammability it would have been worth all the expense.

But the virtual destruction of the Belleisle was not only decided upon for the purpose of providing a solution of the fire problem. There are many other questions connected with naval architecture and naval armaments which it is desirable to have elucidated. In regard especially to the value of various forms of protection these experiments should give most instructive results. Primarily, of course, we desire to learn what sort of defence is to be afforded to the ship's company, both that portion engaged in fighting the guns, and that which is providing the motive power of the vessel. In the Belleisle not only was there side protection in the shape of armour on the casemate, but special patches of steel treated by the Krupp process had been affixed either alongside or on top of the iron plates. There were also armoured athwartship bulkheads, and, seeing that a certain proportion of the projectiles poured into her raked the ship, we should presently learn something as to the value of these, and also of the splinter nets and other improvised defences. The protection of the vitals of the ship; the ammunition hoists, in which we are told the ammunition was placed as it would have actually been in an action; the engines and boilers; and the numerous steam pipes, voice tubes, and other communications, carried from one part of the ship to the other will, we may assume, be carefully examined and photographed. The fact that some of the pumps were still in working order at the end of the bombardment is important; for here again valuable knowledge should be at the service of the authorities. Matters, also, relating to explosives and projectiles, but particularly the former have a special interest seeing that a committee has just been appointed to make inquiries and investigations in this connection. We have already drawn attention to the circumstances that no naval officer has been placed upon this committee, a very serious omission to which the attention of Government will be called as soon as Parliament reassembles. There is much to be learned in regard to the relative powers and advantages of various substances used either as propellants or as bursting charges. We have seen from the evidence of the war that lyddite has not done all that was promised for it, and it may even prove to be the case that some one of its effects under certain conditions is to stay the progress of a fire. It has indeed been suggested in the Times that in some hitherto unnoticed power of the fumes of this explosive is to be found the cause of the Belleisle not igniting. For answers to these and other questions we must wait in patience, but with such information as is already vouchsafed to us, it may safely be asserted that the destruction of whatever fighting efficiency remained to the Belleisle will be amply repaid by the results attained.

Navv Notes.

The paper which Lieutenant Bellairs read at the afternoon meeting at the Royal United Service Institution on Monday has not attracted the attention which we expected, considering the importance of the subject. Although entitled "The Routes of Submarine Cables," the question dealt with by Lieutenant Bellairs was in effect whether it is not better to be contented with having any new cables "British owned," rather than go the expense of constructing and maintaining them on "All-British" routes. The lecturer asserts that whether regarded from the sentimental, strategical, or business point of view, the advantage lies with the former place, and this in spite of the fact that the All-British cable policy has been endorsed by several Imperial and Colonial conferences and committees. In order to prove his point, he refers specifically to the proposed Pacific cable scheme, showing the grave disadvantages which attach to the All-British route, and the delay which has consequently ensued in the construction of the line. Lieutenant Bellairs contends that our policy ought to be directed to laying and maintaining cables with the single aim of assisting commerce, and that by following commercial routes the cables will obtain the protection of the cruisers patrolling those routes. Strategical cables, he argues, such as may be required from time to time when we are at war, must be provided then, and in view of this requirement all possible routes should be surveyed and preparations in the way of resources made in advance.

The old controversy has recently been revived in the columns of the Times concerning the entry examination for the Britannia. The revival is due to the failure of a boy to pass the examination direct from one of the public schools, his parent apparently considering that Mr. Goschen is more or less pledged to guarantee the success of all such candidates. We can understand that many parents may have been led into the belief that lads from the public schools have now the same prospect of passing into the Britannia as those prepared by the crammers. It is at least the case that Latin carries far more marks than any other subject, and to this extent the public school boy enjoys an advantage. But, as "J. R. T." points out, parents have really no grievance at all. They are free to have their boys prepared as they think best, and there are plenty of intelligent lads capable of passing the examination without cramming. It has been suggested that the Admiralty should show special favour to public school candidates, and that the average of intelligence should be lowered to suit certain schools. The notion is ridiculous. If the so-called public schools cannot compete with the crammers or the preparatory schools, so much the worse for the boys sent to these institutions. The assurance of a master that eleven candidates out of fourteen prepared at his school have recently passed into the training ship will not satisfy anyone who examines the context. Whether this is a high proportion depends upon several circumstances as to which we are not enlightened. Sir G. O. Trevelyan mentions that the late Commander Egerton, who was killed at Ladysmith, passed into the Britannia from a private school without special preparation. Indeed, the nomination was offered to the late Admiral Egerton, his father, at such short notice that no special preparation was possible. But this merely proves that the late Commander Egerton was a clever lad.

In connection with the new Cadets' College at Dartmouth a fund has been started for the purpose of suitably decorating the chapel which is to be built. The chaplain of the Britannia, the Rev. A. W. Plant, is receiving subscriptions for the purpose, the estimated amount required being £1,200. A circular letter was sent by Captain Curzon-Howe to every ship in the Service before he left the Britannia making known the facts, and the response has hitherto been very satisfactory, but it is thought that it may be well to give greater publicity to the scheme. Retired officers and the friends of past or present cadets may like to contribute, and in addition there may be those who would like to commemorate in some special and fitting manner their own or their relations' connection with the training ship. The chaplain of the Britannia will be glad to answer any questions on the subject or receive suggestions.

A correspondent, signing himself "Salt Water," writes to the Times to call attention to a feature of the present cruise of the Mediterranean Squadron. According to the itinerary of this cruise, which has been published in several of the home and Malta papers, out of the forty-five days which it is to last "eight only are to be spent at sea, whilst in no case is the fleet more than one whole day in blue water." There seems to us something a little captious about such criticism as this, since it refers to only one cruise out of three which the Mediterranean Squadron usually makes, and it is only fair to assume that while this is devoted to making the officers acquainted with the ports on the western part of the station, the others will contain a programme of fleet exercise. Elsewhere we have seen other remarks upon the present handling of the Mediterranean fleet, and they seem to be conceived in a somewhat similar spirit. We are, as "Salt Water" says, all agreed upon the necessity of seawork and experience as a means towards naval training, and it will take something more than the evidence of this time table of the cruise to persuade us that the Admiral in the Mediterranean is not as fully convinced on this point as any of his critics at home.

In an interview with a representative of the Dorset County Chronicle, Lieutenant Hodges, of the Powerful, supplies some interesting facts concerning the Ladysmith Brigade:—

"The Ladysmith Naval Brigade left the ship on October 29, and at once took train for Ladysmith. It consisted of 280 men, including Capt. Lambton, four lieutenants, paymaster, two engineers, a gunner, and seven midshipmen. We took two 4.7 in. quick-firing guns, three 12pr. 12cwt., one 12pr. 8cwt., and four Maxims. On arriving on the 30th we took part in the big battle that was then proceeding. I had charge of one of the 4.7 in. guns on Junction Hill, and Lieut. Halsey had charge of the other on Cove Redoubt. When the gun was first mounted on Junction Hill Lieut. Egerton opened fire with it. He, poor fellow, was killed after the first few rounds had been fired. I relieved him and stayed there the rest of the time. My redoubt was called the Lady Anne battery. Besides the 4.7 in. gun I had the 12pr. 8cwt. and a Maxim. We fired about 60 rounds the first day and about 30 the next. After that we fired only occasionally, some days only two or three times. We only took with us 300 rounds for each of the heavy guns—200 rounds of lyddite, 200 of shrapnel, and 200 of common shell. The 4.7 in. guns were not mounted on wheels, as they now are. We mounted them in this way. A square pit was dug in the redoubt. Then four huge beams about 20 feet long and 18 inches thick, were bolted together crosswise in the form of a square frame. First came the holding-down ring of the gun, then the gun-mounting bolted on that, and then the gun-cradle, and the gun. If we wanted to unship the gun we had to take the whole thing to pieces. The gun itself came out of the cradle, the cradle came off the mounting, and the mounting off the rings. The beams we used to take all together, just as they were. It used to take five waggons to haul it, each drawn by 16 oxen."

"And when had you to unship the gun?"

"Just when Gen. Buller was supposed to be coming in in December, before the battle of Colenso, I had to move over to Waggon Hill to assist him. There were some Boer guns on that side which I was going to engage to assist him in coming. We shifted by night, and tried to hide the fact of the gun being there until it was necessary to open fire. We began work on Junction Hill on Wednesday, December 13, and left Waggon Hill again on the 17th. I never opened fire there at all, for, owing to Gen. Buller's reverse, the gun was not required."

Naval officers will not need to be reminded that on the coast of Dorset and some seven miles inland from Weymouth there stands a tower which was erected to the memory of Sir Thomas Hardy, Nelson's friend and flag-captain. This tower was erected by public subscription, but no provision was made for its repair, and it stands on private property. It is now proposed, however, to make good this omission, and Mr. W. Hardy Mansfield, the present owner, has agreed on certain conditions to convey the tower and sufficient land surrounding it to the National Trust for the Preservation of Historical Monuments, and this body are willing to accept this trust for the use of the public. The sum required is £600, of which it is proposed to invest £100 for the purpose of keeping the tower in good order, while the remainder of the total sum is required to effect the necessary repairs. An influential committee has taken the matter in hand, and subscriptions may be paid to Colonel E. Williams, M.P., either at the Wilts and Dorset Bank, Dorchester, or any of the other banks in the county, on account of the Hardy Monument Fund.

The spread of the "Boxers" insurrection in China and the injury which they have done to the railway lines has at last compelled the Foreign Powers to take action. A number of national men of war have arrived at Taku and Marines and Bluejackets have been sent to Tientsin and Pekin, the Legation Guards having been summoned to the latter place as the excitement in the capital appeared to be reaching a dangerous point. Some of the Europeans connected with the railway, who were cut off by the rioters, have been rescued, but there are still a number of missionaries with their families who appear to be in a perilous position, and from of all parts the surrounding country news is constantly arriving of fresh atrocities. The British vessels on the spot are apparently the Orlando and Algerine, and brigades have been landed from these vessels. The force which has been sent to Pekin consists of the following foreign troops:—Three British officers and seventy-two men, seven American officers and fifty-six men, three Italian officers and thirty-nine men, two Japanese officers and twenty-four men, three French officers and seventy-two men, and four Russian officers and seventy-one men. The troops took with them five quick-firing guns. The Germans are also sending a detachment of marines from the Kaiserin Augusta.

The Admiralty have given Messrs. Swan and Hunter, of Wallsend-on-Tyne, an order to build a floating graving dock, of the Clark and Standfield pattern, to replace the one now at Bermuda, and which was towed there in thirty-six days by the Warrior, Captain (now Admiral) Henry Boys, and the Black Prince, Captain A. C. Gordon (since deceased), in June and July, 1869, from the Thames. Admiral Boys will most probably have the pleasure of seeing the new dock start on her voyage.

Navy Personal.

H.R.H. the Duke of York, accompanied by Lieutenant Sir Charles Cust, honoured the officers of the Royal yachts with his presence at their annual dinner on Monday last in the Hotel Cecil.

Admiral Lord Charles Scott, Commander-in-Chief at Devonport, and Rear-Admiral T. S. Jackson, Admiral-Superintendent of the dockyard, were presented, on appointment to their respective posts, at the Levée on Monday last, and Captain Sir Richard Poore, Bart., of the Royal Naval Barracks, attended thereat. The Western command was not, however, without a flag officer, as Rear-Admiral A. D. Fanshawe, of the Channel Fleet, arrived the previous day in the Magnificent, and assumed the port duties until Lord Charles returned on Tuesday.

Vice-Admiral Sir Henry Stephenson, Extra Equerry to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, attains the age of fifty-eight on Wednesday next.

Vice-Admiral Sir Harry Rawson, commanding the Channel Fleet, dispersed the vessels under his orders on Saturday, on the conclusion of the experimental firing at the Belleisle, to their respective ports, where they will be refitted and their crews granted leave.

Vice-Admiral C. G. Fane represented the Admiralty at the meeting at Marlborough House on Monday last, at which H.R.H. the Prince of Wales presided, to promote co-operation between the several war funds.

Rear-Admiral the Hon. T. S. Brand joins the board of directors of the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company.

Captain Anson Schomberg arrived at Plymouth in the Revenge on Saturday last with the officers and ship's company, recently paid off at Malta, from the Victorious, which vessel he commanded since June, 1897. He proceeded to Chatham to place the Revenge in reserve to be refitted.

Captain the Hon. Hedworth Lambton intends being present at the Royal Naval and Military Bazaar in Olympia on the 19th inst., when the Powerful stall should be an important factor in aid of the Home for Disabled Sailors and Soldiers. The historical 4.7-in. gun is to appear on each side of the entrance and the Union Jack will float over the stall. The Countess of Pembroke, sister of the gallant officer, presides at the stall, aided by her sisters, the Duchess of Leeds and Lady Anne Lambton.

Rear-Admiral A. B. Jenkins hoisted his flag yesterday on board the Magnificent at Devonport, as second in command of the Channel Fleet, in place of Rear-Admiral A. D. Fanshawe, whose period of service expired the previous day.

Rear-Admiral Charles Drury, who was retained in command at Gibraltar after promotion to flag-rank, is now Vice-President of the Ordnance Committee, in the vacancy caused by Rear-Admiral A. B. Jenkins' appointment to the Channel Fleet.

Rear-Admiral J. H. Bainbridge completed his fifty-fifth year of age on Wednesday last.

Commodore E. S. Poë, commanding the Training Squadron, was to leave Gibraltar on Thursday last with the vessels under his orders, excepting the Minerva, for Vigo; from whence he would proceed to Portland, arriving there about the 13th inst.

Captain F. O. Pike, of the Minerva, left Gibraltar on Sunday last for Madeira to assist the Wye, reported disabled at that island.

Captain E. E. Bradford, Transport Officer, Thames District, has compiled a small work on coaling war-ships, which should be of use in our Fleet. He was executive officer of the Channel flag-ship for three years, and had, therefore, exceptional experience in this important, though somewhat unpleasant, duty.

Captain G. H. Cherry, of the Argonaut, reached Portsmouth on Thursday in last week, but could not get any further on his voyage to China in consequence of the engines of that cruiser developing further defects, which necessitated her return to Chatham, where she was six weeks in dockyard hands after the pennant was hoisted.

Commander C. H. Dare, of the Bellona, left Portsmouth on Saturday last for Iceland for the protection of British fishing interests off that island.

Commander H. N. Rolfe, of the Cockatrice, rendered valuable service to the Roumanian authorities at Bucharest in sending his ship's company to assist in extinguishing a fire on Saturday last.

Commander W. H. Coombs (retired), of the Colonial service at Trinidad, and Assistant Paymaster Owen Mathew, relieved from the Urgent at Jamaica on expiration of foreign service, arrived home on Friday in last week by the Royal Mail steamship Atrato.

Commander W. R. Creswell (retired), recently transferred from the South Australian Naval Defence Force to that of Queensland, was presented with a valuable service of silver plate before leaving Adelaide by those who served under his command during the past nine years.

Commander L. Barnes-Lawrence, who took the Rupert to Gibraltar in 1896, and two years afterwards resigned that command on appointment as Captain of the Port at the "Rock," has now voluntarily retired, and the Service loses thereby a valuable executive officer. Prior to promotion to his present rank in 1892 he was second in command of the Severn in China, and gained his step for the creditable state of that cruiser. From 1892-95 he was attached to the Naval Intelligence Department.

Commander F. C. A. Ogilvy, who as Senior Lieutenant of the Terrible highly distinguished himself with the Naval Brigade attached to General Sir Redvers Buller's force in Natal, and was in consequence specially promoted in March last, now rejoins that cruiser as second in command, in place of Commander A. H. Limpus, recently promoted Captain for his services in South Africa. The appointment is in every way desirable, and will, we are sure, gratify his brother officers and shipmates of the Terrible. Commander Ogilvy was presented at last Monday's Levée.

Lieut.-Commander H. F. Shakespear, of the Dwarf, having spent several months off the East Coast of Africa, where he gained the Royal Humane Society's medal for jumping overboard in the Limpopo river when one of his crew fell into the water, has gone to St. Helena. The vessel he commands should be useful in preventing the escape of war prisoners from parts of the island other than the anchorage.

Lieutenant R. F. Scott, Senior Lieutenant and Torpedo Officer of the flagship Majestic, has, in accordance with Mr. Goschen's promise, mentioned last week in our notes on the annual meeting of the Royal Geographical Society, been selected to command the exploring vessel of the intended Antarctic expedition. His brother officers and the Service generally will naturally hope for his success in this highly important undertaking, where he will undoubtedly prove himself a worthy follower of Captain Biscoe (1831) and Sir James Ross (1841) in the Southern Continent. When the Transit of Venus Expedition, 1874-75, was ordered to Kerguelen Island, the late Mr. Proctor advocated the despatch of one of the vessels (the Supply) to the South Polar region, as more satisfactory observations would be obtained in high latitudes than at the Kerguelen station, and much valuable information acquired. The Admiralty, however, did not support the suggestion, as an iron vessel would not have fared well in a frozen sea, and her absence from civilisation been unpleasantly long.

Sub-Lieutenant H. L. Boyle, Midshipman H. T. England, Naval Cadets R. N. Suter and D. Stuart, for passage to the Doris at the Cape, and Lieutenant R. H. Graves-Burton, R.N.R., to join the Niobe, embarked last week in the White Star steamship Britannia, at Southampton, with large reinforcements for South Africa.

Chaplain the Rev. C. R. Mullins' appointment to Haslar Hospital is a pleasant concession to an officer whose naval career has generally been on the home station. He joined in 1882 and served at sea in the Malabar, Indian troopship, 1883-85; Minotaur, Channel flag-ship, 1885-87; Tamar, troopship, 1890-92, during which he frequently returned to England. The remaining thirteen years were passed in Hamoaze in various stationary ships.

Surgeon H. A. Julius, invalided from the Sphinx, arrived at Plymouth on Friday in last week by the P. and O. steamship Arabia from Bombay.

Staff-Paymaster M. G. F. B. Fenwick has been placed on the retired list in consequence of ill-health.

Major-General (retired) Mackay Harriot, R.M.L.I., commanding the Plymouth Volunteer Infantry Brigade, goes into camp at Lustleigh, Devon, with his force from July 23 to August 18 next.

Majors J. H. Swanton, W. S. S. Harvest, and E. S. D. Crowther, R.M.L.I., qualified last month in tactics for promotion.

The members of the Royal Navy Club, 1765-85, dined at the Whitehall Rooms, Hotel Metropole, on the 30th ult., to celebrate Her Majesty's Birthday. Admiral Sir R. Vesey Hamilton, G.C.B., presided, and the guest of the evening was Lieut.-General Henry Kent. There were present:—

Admirals E. S. Adeane, H. W. Comber, E. St. J. Garforth, W. H. Henderson, Sir Algernon Heneage, V. O. Inglefield, C. Johnstone, T. S. Jackson, A. W. Moore, Sir More-Molyneux, T. Saumarez, W. C. Singleton, G. O. Twiss, Sir Richd. Tracey, Sir George Willes, Hon. W. I. Ward.

Captains John Burgess, A. C. B. Bromley, O. Churchill, A. C. Corry, H. T. Clanchy, W. S. De Kantzow, W. G. England, W. C. C. Forsyth, G. D. C. Henderson, R. W. Hope, S. A. Johnson, C. K. Kennedy-Purvis, H. W. A. Littledale, G. MacArthur, H. Nelson, C. J. Norcock, R. Pitman, S. H. Rickman, G. H. Rainier, F. C. D. Sturdee, W. P. Shakespear, P. K. Smythies, W. Spratt, R. H. S. Navy Foreign.

Our readers may remember the attack which "Jean de la Poulaine" made in the Marine Française upon the education and training of our naval officers, sharing the view of "Nauticus" in his notorious "Sons of Nelson." We refuted the arguments at the time, but it may be interesting to note that Vice-Admiral Arthur Jaceguay, of the Brazilian Navy, has recurred to the subject in the Revista Maritima Brasileira. His article was published a little time ago, and has just been reprinted in the same pages. He altogether adopts the view we expressed, and remarks that, although French and Spanish officers have always been reputed to possess greater scientific knowledge than British officers, they have always ended by being beaten. He further says that in the development of our system of training we have acted wisely, giving a much larger place to practice than to theory. He denies that scientific discoveries and their application to naval construction and arms, or to navigation, have in any way changed the essence of the naval art, and he remarks that the most profound scientific knowledge of navigation, mechanics and physics will not enable anyone to handle a boat even in the smoothest water.

In the opinion of Admiral Jaceguay the sphere of action of an officer is itself so complex that it is absurd to attempt to make him absorb all the learning of the encyclopædia. "Of what value at the crisis of an action would be all the scientific and technical knowledge that an officer could possess if he should find his ship paralysed by some damage to her machinery or by her heavy ordnance being rendered useless by some derangement of the hydraulic or electric apparatus of the turrets, or if the electric lighting should be interfered with by a break in the circuit caused by a projectile? Would the engineers on board go to consult him as to the manner in which the damage should be made good?" These remarks are made by the Brazilian Admiral in relation to the training of Brazilian officers, of whom he remarks that, to begin with, they have not the naval aptitude, and that it is absurd to give them a training which sends them afloat at twenty-two, when it is too late to attain it. The Revista, which is conducted under some difficulties, has just published a special number of great interest in relation to the celebration of the fourth centenary of the discovery of Brazil by Cabral. It is illustrated by pictures of caravels and nautical instruments of the time.

The French Northern Squadron recently left Brest under command of Vice-Admiral Ménard for its summer cruise, and a correspondent of the Yacht draws attention to the fact that it has never been so powerful, but that it will be still more so in a little time, if the intention is carried out of replacing the Redoutable and the Amiral Duperré by the St. Louis and Hoche. The squadron is now composed as follows: first division, Masséna (flag of Vice-Admiral Ménard), Carnot, and Amiral Baudin; second division, Formidable (flag of Rear-Admiral Touchard), Amiral Duperré and Redoutable; armoured cruisers, Dupuy-de-Lôme and Bruix; protected cruisers, Guichen and D'Estreées; torpedo gun-boats and destroyers, Fleurus, Cassini, La Hire, and Durandal; seagoing torpedo boats, Aquilon and Mangini. The squadron has been engaged in running torpedoes, distant signalling, steam tactics, target practice and other exercises.

It is interesting to learn that the naval prefect at Toulon has just forbidden access to submarine vessels to any person not engaged in that particular branch of the Service—even to officers in uniform who are not provided with proper authority.

The term of Admiral Fournier's command of the French Mediterranean Squadron ends in the course of the summer, and it has been rumoured that he would be replaced by Vice-Admiral Pottier, or Vice-Admiral Maigret. It is now stated that the command will be given to the latter officer, and that the chief of his staff will be Captain Babeau, while Admiral Pottier will succeed Admiral Ménard in the command of the Northern Squadron next October. Admiral Fournier's command has been in some ways remarkable, and he is probably the strongest man who has been in the French Mediterranean Squadron for some years. He is an officer of particular ideas, but has never attempted to force them upon the authorities in any unfair way. He is best known to the reading public as the author of a somewhat remarkable volume, entitled "La Flotte Nécessaire," which attracted a good deal of attention in this country when it was published. During the period of his command the admiral has devoted great personal attention to the subjects of squadron formations, steam tactics, and gunnery, as well as to the thorough training of the ships' companies.

The Sampson-Schley controversy has come to the front again owing to an interview attributed to Captain F. E. Chadwick, U.S.N., in which the character of Rear-Admiral Winfield S. Schley was seriously attacked. Although nothing regarding the matter has been officially announced, it is stated that the interview has been brought to the attention of Secretary Long, who has been necessarily forced to ask Captain Chadwick for an explanation. The Secretary of the Navy was questioned about the matter. Captain Chadwick is an officer of large experience, and probably knows that attacks upon Admiral Schley are especially unbecoming now that he is absent from the country. There is a tendency to revive the unhappy controversy. Undoubtedly great provocation has been given to the friends of Admiral Sampson by a recent revival of the attack upon him instigated by a publication in the New York World. Throughout the controversy Admiral Sampson has observed becoming discretion, and his attitude has increased the esteem in which he is held. It would have been well for him if all of his friends could have been persuaded to maintain a like attitude of reserve. The positive affirmation of his merits and his claim to public consideration would have met with universal approval, and might have accomplished the purpose which has been defeated by the ill-advised assaults upon an officer who, whatever his merits or defects, is under the protection of the regulations for the government of the Navy.

Rear-Admiral Hichborn, U.S.N., Chief Naval Constructor, has issued a statement showing the percentage of completion of vessels under construction. The battleship Kearsarge and the protected cruiser Albany are practically completed. The battleship Kentucky, which has been placed in commission, is within 2 per cent. of completion. The Alabama is 94 per cent. completed. The battleship Wisconsin, under construction at San Francisco, is 90 per cent. finished, and the Illinois is 76 per cent. The Maine is 24 per cent. completed, the Ohio 18 per cent. The only vessel of the Denver class upon which any progress has been made is the Chattanooga, under construction by Lewis Nixon, which is 1 per cent. completed.

PROPOSED REVIVAL OF THE R.N.A.V.

[FROM A CORRESPONDENT.]

A meeting, convened by Mr. Charles Jacks of the Stock Exchange, a gentleman who held for many years a commission in the Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers, was held in London last week to consider the advisability of resuscitating the disbanded corps. It is perfectly natural that the officers of the corps, which was disbanded in 1892, should always have resented the report of the late Sir George Tryon's Committee and the action of the Admiralty based upon it. The suggestion now made is that Lord George Hamilton's Board misunderstood the true functions of naval volunteers, and that changes have taken place since 1892 which render the resuscitation of the corps extremely desirable. At a moment when military volunteers are doing such excellent service in South Africa there may be something to be said in favour of encouraging the development of naval volunteers, but to expect the Admiralty to admit that an error in judgment was committed in 1892 would be too sanguine. Admiralty Boards have been known to make mistakes, but they have never yet been known to admit their fallibility.

The naval volunteers were disbanded for reasons which seemed to be sufficient eight years ago. The President of the committee was an officer of great administrative ability, whose views rightly carried weight, and only one member of the committee, Sir Allen Young, dissented from the recommendations. The various batteries comprising the corps, with the possible exception of that at Bristol, were shown to have fallen into inefficiency, or to be lacking in seamanlike qualities, or to be unfit for service in ships of war. But there was another and even stronger reason assigned by the committee for recommending the abolition of the force. It was clearly stated in a letter from Lord G. Hamilton to an officer of the corps:—"The R.N.A.V. are a corps to whom the Navy cannot assign in war time any definite place or sphere of action in a scheme of national offence, and therefore their continuance as an available naval force is impolitic and misleading." At that time the force consisted of less than 2,000 officers and men, a large proportion of whom had no experience of sea life, and were even lacking in aquatic tastes. The men obtained superficial training in gunnery on board obsolete hulks and at obsolete guns. Old gunboats were not always forthcoming for the week's cruise required by the regulations, and but for the courtesy and zeal of yacht owners among the officers, the capitation grants must often have been sacrificed. The corps came into being in 1873, chiefly on the initiative of Lord Brassey. It was composed of batteries, each of a nominal strength of eighty men, and of these six were raised in London, and others at Bristol, Liverpool, Glasgow, and similar ports. From time to time the Admiralty received and refused various applications for the establishment of new batteries in other parts of the kingdom. The force might, no doubt, have been largely augmented, and it is urged now that as many as 20,000 men could easily be raised and trained at small cost to the country. The battery commanders were not, as a rule, men who displayed much knowledge of seamanship or gunnery. They fell out among themselves, discipline suffered, and resignations of both officers and men resulted. The force, in short, was discredited some years prior to the abolition, and all the efforts of a few zealous officers like the late Lieut. Seth Smith failed to restore the confidence of the Admiralty in its utility. Such, in brief, is the history of this much discussed Volunteer force, to revive which so many abortive efforts have already been made. As recently as 1896, the Navy League was urged by an ex-officer of the corps to take up the question, but the League declined. It remains to be seen if the efforts of Mr. Jacks and his friends will influence the Admiralty.

The history of the corps and its decline and fall have recently been told by Mr. Percy Nisbet, who supplies also all the arguments that can be put forth in favour of resuscitation. Mr. Nisbet affirms that there is a general desire throughout the kingdom that a corps of naval volunteers should be established "for the better defence of our coasts." Large numbers of men are willing to be enrolled, "provided that their services be appreciated, and provision made for training them in the use of modern weapons." These men, he declares, will be willing to serve in ships of war in war time. How does Mr. Nisbet know this? The proposed corps is to be ready also for "immediate service in case of national emergency." How can these statements be made concerning a force which does not even exist?

Mr. Nisbet believes that it will be utterly useless to revive the corps on the old lines, and he suggests an alternative scheme which embraces training, organisation, and all the details which make for theoretical efficiency. It will be time enough to consider Mr. Nisbet's details when the Admiralty have been convinced of the need of naval volunteers for "coast defence" work, or "filling the gaps of the active personnel in time of war." These are essential functions of the R.N. Reserve, so that one important objection is not yet met. On the other hand, it is possible that there may be numbers of young men of aquatic tastes, such as yachtmens, boating men, and so forth, who could readily acquire the elements of seamanship and naval gunnery. A Volunteer force of 20,000 such men, capable of replacing the Coastguard, manning harbour craft, for signalling duties, &c., assisting in the defence of ports, and the like, might be useful in a great naval war. Such a force, however, would be costly to maintain and drill, while the defence of harbours is a matter for the War Office rather than the Admiralty. It does not come into the general scheme of preparation for offence by the Fleet and its auxiliaries. Experience has proved that military Volunteers and irregulars can rapidly be converted into highly efficient troops, but it has not so clearly demonstrated that landsmen can be quickly converted into efficient fighting men afloat. The movement initiated by Mr. Jacks is probably due to some confusion of thought on this matter, combined with the natural enthusiasm caused by the exploits of our irregulars in South Africa.

Two house scholarships at Tonbridge School are being offered this year in the first instance to sons of officers killed or incapacitated in the South African War. These scholarships are of the value of not less than £40 per annum, and may be held with the Judd scholarship (£40 per annum) or the Foundation Scholarships covering the tuition fees. All candidates must be under 15 years of age on August 1. The examination will be held on June 12 and 13. Further particulars may be obtained from the headmaster.

THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL, A.M.S.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In your last issue, "Underpaid" makes an appeal for increasing the pay of the head of the Army Medical Service. I fear the time is but ill-chosen; the over-burdened taxpayer, already groaning under increased rates, would probably demur. An increase of pay to enable the director-general to entertain would also be looked on with disfavour, the military authorities being decidedly averse to entertainments which increase the expenses of the officer, more especially as hitherto the duties of the office have been carried on without any hospitalities being dispensed. The director-general who left his family in such poor circumstances was a very exceptional case, men generally credited with provident habits do not fall into this condition. A reference to the charitable fund of the Medical Service will show that it is the wives and families of the junior officers who, as a rule, require charitable donations. notoriously ill-paid, and with the exception of a few, spending their lives in a series of frequent moves varied by war and pestilence. On their behalf I would appeal to the head of the Medical Service to use his best endeavours to have their condition improved. Alteration of rank presented such insuperable difficulties to the military authorities as regards the surgeon-general that a à fortiori in the case of the director-general it would probably be found to be more insurmountable. The present is a time not of "disappointment nor unhappiness," but one generally of contentment with the important and even unexpected concessions recently granted, apparently not one for fresh demands to be made.

NON EXPECTANS.

THE YORK SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Will you permit me through the medium of your newspaper to bring before the public the claims of one of the military institutions, the York Soldiers' Institute? It has been in existence 13 years, having been opened in the Jubilee year, 1887. It has been largely patronised by thousands of soldiers during these years, not only by those quartered in York itself but by those in different parts of Yorkshire and Lancashire and other garrison towns, who have used it alike as their home and their club. But it is suffering at present from financial difficulties, owing to the loss of many old subscribers removed by death or other causes, &c., by the present war, which has impelled so many friends of the soldiers to give largely to the other numerous funds already started for the support and comfort of the men and of those they have left behind them. At present we are doing a great work among the Militia and Line recruits, who are using the Institute freely and gladly; and I have also received many letters, not only from soldiers who have left York during the past winter for South Africa, but from regiments out there who have known it in bygone years, asking many questions as to the welfare of the "Old Institute Home," and assuring me that when the war is over, if they are spared to return, they intend to spend their furlough here again. I feel sure that the many generous hearts who feel sympathy with the soldiers will not let me appeal in vain for help to keep the doors of the "Old Home" open for them, and give them the hearty welcome they look forward to when the sufferings and hardships of this awful war are past.

With the consent of the General commanding the North-Eastern District, and other military authorities, as well as with the approval of the Council of the Soldiers' Institute, we are receiving some of the wounded men who are being sent on to the York Military Hospital for medical treatment, the slighter cases of which, although not severe enough for detention in hospital, still require nursing and proper food and care. I would, therefore, plead with all friends of soldiers to help us to keep them here free from all expense till able to return to their regiments or homes.

J. M. SCOTT MONCRIEFF,
Hon. Lady Superintendent,
Soldiers' Institute, York.

It has been decided to add to the area of the London recruiting district by transferring to it the portion of the Woolwich district lying north of the Thames.

A COMMITTEE consisting of Lieut.-Gen. Sir William Stirling, Major-Gen. Sandilands, Col. Fawkes, R.A., and J. G. Uppeby (Hon. Sec.), has been formed to endeavour to obtain some permanent assistance for the widow and daughters (three) of the late Lieut.-Col. Seccombe (retired), R.A., known to most officers of the regiment through his pictures and illustrations to books. Amongst others "Military Misreadings of Shakespeare," "Army and Navy Drolleries," &c., &c., may be mentioned. He was unfortunately unable to draw for some years before his death in December last, owing to loss of sight, and was therefore unable to make any provision for his family, except keeping up the premium on a policy of insurance for £500. This and the Compassionate Allowance, probably about £70 a year, which has been applied for from the Government, is the whole sum available for the support of Mrs. Seccombe and her three daughters, who unfortunately are by no means strong. Messrs. Cox and Co. have kindly consented to receive subscriptions, and Colonel Uppeby will gladly receive and acknowledge any that may be sent to him at the Junior United Service Club, S.W.

WAR RELIEF FUNDS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—The Council of the Soldiers' and Sailors Families Association have been anxious for some time to give the public and their supporters an account of the funds entrusted to them for the relief of the wives and families of our soldiers and sailors engaged in the present war. This, however, has hitherto been impossible in consequence of the daily increase of applicants claiming help from the funds, which has prevented any estimate of the receipts and expenditure being arrived at.

From the commencement of the war to the present time, approximately £530,000 has been placed in the hands of the Association and its branches. Of this amount, over £40,000 was expended for the broken period up to December 31, 1899, and from January 1 to March 31, the sum of £150,000, making together £190,000 expended up to this latter date.

It is believed that the claims on the Association having now reached high water mark, it may be calculated that the sum of £50,000 per month is now being expended, and that consequently there is sufficient to meet probable requirements till the end of October. This is, of course, confined to the actual work carried on by the Association, and does not include relief being administered by independent funds throughout the kingdom, although in almost all cases these funds are working harmoniously with the Association, and as a result little or no overlapping is taking place.

The scale and system of relief decided upon by the Association at the commencement of the war, which, stated shortly, was "to keep the families in the same position as when the breadwinner was at home" has almost universally been adopted by the independent funds throughout the country, and may, therefore, be accepted as having been a sound one.

It may be stated that where local relief funds exist relief is generally confined to the Reservists' families, whereas the Association relieves the dependent relatives of all classes, and makes no distinction between wives "on" and "not on" the strength, and deals also with the families of sailors and Marines and dependent relatives of both Services.

The Council do not advise any reduction in this scale, believing that funds will not be wanting when those at present in hand are exhausted until hostilities cease, and, after the war, until matters settle down into their normal state.

JAMES GILDEA, Colonel,
Treasurer and Chairman of the Executive Committee, Soldiers' and Sailors'
Families Association.
23, Queen Anne's Gate, Westminster, S.W.

THE annual Aldershot Rifle Meeting is to be held on July 2 and three following days, on the Ash ranges.

A SCOTTISH Regiments' Relief Fund has been established with the object of sending a useful gift of remembrance to the soldiers of the Highland and other Scottish regiments now in South Africa. The gift will be a packet of tobacco and a pipe in a simple box, with a greeting from Scotsmen to Scotsmen. Gen. Hector MacDonald recently wrote that tobacco was one of the things the men would most value. The many letters from the rank and file bear feeling testimony to the joys of "a pipe" amid the trials of the campaign. The amount required to carry out the scheme will not be great, but it will be large enough to call for hearty effort on the part of well-wishers. Subscriptions should be forwarded to the hon. treasurer, Sir James R. D. McGrigor, Bart., 25, Charles Street, St. James's Square, while other communications should be addressed to the hon. secretary, at the Scottish Corporation Hall, Crane Court, Fleet Street.

"Food and Cookery"

in an interesting article in its April issue, after describing Harvey's Sauce, and its original manufacture by Mrs. Elizabeth Lazenby, says: "Through succeeding generations her lineal successors have continued the business on the same lines as those originally laid out, and from the original recipe, so that stands to-day, as it has stood for more than a century, the synonym for all that is best in a pure, mellow, appetising sauce."

RESERVE SOLDIERS.

The working committee of the National Association for the Employment of Reserve Soldiers, held a meeting on Monday at the head office, 12, Buckingham Street, Strand, Lieut.-Gen. Sir William Drysdale in the chair. The report for the past year showed that permanent employment had been found for 4,780 men, as against 6,160 for the year previous, the falling off in the numbers being accounted for by the mobilisation of the Reserve, and consequent partial dislocation of work. Numerous letters were read from employers of labour regretting the loss of men who have been called up, and stating their intention of keeping the places open for these men till their return. The committee announced that special arrangements were being made to meet the rush of men who would be returning to civil life when the war was over. The annual general meeting will be held on Friday, June 8, at the Royal United Service Institution at 12.

AT PRETORIA.

PRETORIA is in the hands of the British, and the crowning act of the war has been achieved. This happy incident in a campaign conducted with consummate ability and vigour was reached on Tuesday, when Lord Roberts took formal possession of the Transvaal capital. The several series of operations extending from the invasion of the Orange Free State to the occupation of Pretoria have been marked by a daring which, with a commander of less experience, might justly have been considered rash. While the British columns pressed forward across the arid veldt from Paardeberg to Bloemfontein, Boer commandoes of considerable strength were outflanked, brushed aside, or left disregarded, the objective alone being kept steadily in view without relaxation of effort. But if Lord Roberts was apparently careless about the security of his western communications, it was because his matured strategy was working to give him possession of the line of rail from Bloemfontein to the south, which line a few days later was occupied by his troops in its entire length. After the long but necessary halt at Bloemfontein, the army, in renewed strength, was ready a second time to start upon its way. But, although the great Boer trek to the south had been checked, and Wepener relieved, the bulk of the raiding force still occupied the country on Lord Roberts's eastern flank from Ladybrand to Thaba N'Chu, constituting a standing menace to his communications. Facing the risk that without doubt existed, and relying on his own powers of generalship, backed up by his gallant lieutenants, Lord Roberts advanced without hesitation, and reaped the reward of his boldness in the capture, successively, of Kroonstad and Johannesburg. The reality of the risk thus run has been demonstrated, both by the persistent opposition that has been made to the columns of Sir Leslie Rundle and General Brabant, while the main army was advancing north, and also by the second attempt made within the last few days to raid again to the south and threaten the communications, an attempt which led to the unfortunate surrender of the 13th Regiment of Yeomanry near Lindley, on the 31st ult. This move on the part of the enemy, at the moment when Johannesburg was in Lord Roberts's grasp, was bold and cleverly conceived.

The chief part of the fighting had fallen to the mounted troops since the battle of the Zand River, and there was no change in this respect after crossing the Vaal. On the 31st Lord Roberts reported that General French, acting in front of his left, had been opposed throughout his march on the 28th and 29th, but had "managed" to drive the enemy from strong positions north of Johannesburg, where he held the ground he was directed to occupy. Although the Boer positions west of Johannesburg were too strong to be readily forced by Generals French and Hamilton unaided, Lord Roberts on the 29th carried out his bold attack on the railway junctions at Natal Spruit and Elandsfontein, points of supreme importance. Colonel Henry, with his mounted infantry, supported on the right by the 3rd Cavalry Brigade, had orders to seize these places at all costs. The Divisions of Generals Pole-Carew and Tucker advanced meanwhile along the railway. Natal Spruit Station, giving command of the south-eastern line, was first secured. The Mounted Infantry then worked forward, and after some sharp fighting took possession of Elandsfontein, thus cutting the communication with Pretoria and isolating the Boer force opposed to the British left.

The army, after marching through Johannesburg, encamped on the north side ready for a forward movement, the 14th Brigade, under General Wavell, being left in the town to maintain order. On Saturday evening Lord Roberts was at Orange Grove, a few miles to the north, and early on Monday he came in contact with the enemy at the Six Mile Spruit, a stream flowing from east to west across the approaches to the Capital. The Boers holding the south bank were quickly dislodged by the mounted troops, and retired to a second position defended by guns. The British heavy guns, which had been kept well in the front, were then brought into action, and, supported by General Stephenson's Brigade, cleared the position. A persistent attempt was made by the enemy to turn the British left and threaten their left rear, a movement which was not effect-ally checked until Ian Hamilton, inclining his column from the extreme left towards the centre, drove the Boers back on Pretoria. Before dark they were forced to abandon nearly all their positions, followed by Ian Hamilton to the outskirts of the capital. Lord Roberts immediately demanded the surrender of the place, and a brief negotiation with Commandant General Louis Botha followed, which led to its occupation on Tuesday without further resistance. The feebleness of the attempt of the Transvaal Boers hitherto to defend their own territory must have been as disappointing to their friends as the marching powers and the victorious advance of the British Army have been sources of gratification and admiration to the subjects of the Queen. But the Boers have considerable rallying power. There are armed burghers still in considerable numbers in the field, and if the precedent of the Orange River Colony be followed, many weeks—perhaps months—may elapse before all opposition has ceased. Lord Roberts, when his control of the railways is complete, will hold the country in his grasp, and from his central position within the circle of the abandoned forts of Pretoria he can send out flying columns to meet the guerilla bands, and disarm the burghers. By degrees things will settle down, but it will be absolutely necessary to maintain the army of occupation without diminution until both of the conquered territories return to a condition of undoubted peace. A forward movement by Sir Redvers Buller may now be expected, in co-operation with Lord Roberts, in order to clear the railway from Johannesburg to Natal, and so provide the army in the Transvaal with a second and shorter line of communications with a sea base. General Hildyard, after a temporary occupation of Utrecht, has rejoined General Buller and General Lyttleton at Coetzee's Drift on the Buffalo River, ten miles north of Newcastle, guards the right flank of the Natal Army Corps, its right rear towards Dannhauser being watched by vigilant cavalry patrols.

From other quarters in the theatre of war unpleasant tidings have come. In Griqualand West there is a revival of the rebellion which was reported to have been stamped out some months ago. Two columns of British troops have been operating in that district against rebel commandoes. Sir Charles Warren, with 700 men, was surrounded at night, surprised, and heavily attacked before dawn by 1,000 rebels, on the 29th ult., when encamped in a strong position at Faberspruit, twelve miles from Douglas. When day broke and the nature of the assault was understood the rebels were repulsed at all points, but the British loss was heavy, and included among the killed Colonel Spence, the gallant commander of the Duke of Edinburgh's Volunteers. The fact that a body of untrained rebels could thus approach and surprise an organised and disciplined force not much inferior in numbers can only be realised on the hypothesis that the ordinary precautions for guarding the approaches to a camp, by means of outposts and patrols, were neglected. It is apparent that Sir Charles Warren's force is not strong enough to suppress the rising, and we are glad to learn that reinforcements have left Cape Town to join him. As a set-off to this unsatisfactory affair it is pleasant to record a decided success in a well-managed action on the 27th ult. at Koegas Pont, fifty miles west of Prieska on the Orange River, where Colonel Adye, R.A., surprised and defeated, with loss of laager, 100 prisoners, flocks, and ammunition, a body of rebels endeavouring to form a junction with another commando at Kheis, further to the west. The effectual suppression with an adequate force of this recrudescence of rebellion is in the highest degree desirable in the interest of an early peaceful settlement.

No less important than the advance of Lord Roberts has been the guarding of the railway south of the Vaal. With this object the divisions of Generals Rundle and Brabant, with the Highland Brigade, that of General Clements, and Lord Methuen's force, hold a chain of posts covering about 110 miles from Heilbron to Ficksburg. On the 29th ult. General Rundle advanced north-east from Senekal, in order to draw the enemy from Lindley where a force of Yeomanry was hard pressed. The action, which was severely contested, was apparently successful, since Lindley was afterwards occupied unopposed. It has been disappointing, therefore, to learn that the success of this cleverly conceived manœuvre was after all only partial, as two days later the 13th (Irish) Batn. of Imperial Yeomanry, under the command of Lieut.-Colonel Spragge, D.S.O., was compelled, after losing heavily, to yield to very superior numbers. Lord Methuen, who was in the neighbourhood of Kroonstad, was despatched at once by Lord Roberts to the assistance of the Yeomanry. Starting half an hour after receipt of orders, he marched forty-four miles in twenty-five hours, but arrived too late to effect a rescue. He at once attacked the Boers, and after a running fight of five hours completely routed them. This forced march, which we believe to be the record performance of its kind of the present campaign, and the subsequent victorious action, redound greatly to Lord Methuen's credit. There is little to mention concerning the columns acting from the western borders of the Transvaal and from Rhodesia. They are steadily converging towards the centre of operations, and Boer commandoes are said to be advancing against them.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND NATIONAL DEFENCE.

OF all the suggestions hitherto put forward in this period of national enthusiasm for bettering our military position, the letter published in the Cambridge Review of Wednesday last, signed "T. F. C. Huddleston, King's College," is one of the most practical and important. If the proposals here formulated can only be carried out, the effect will be far-reaching. Our own views on the subject are pretty well known. We have always maintained that the example set by the Universities in the matter of what we may term military enterprise has been most lowering to us a nation. As we said lately, not only has the average undergraduate refrained from bearing arms himself in any large-hearted sense, but he has done incalculable mischief to all branches of the Service—to the Militia and Volunteers more particularly—by depreciating the efforts of those who do. Thus hundreds of young men, many of them destined to become men of position, have been launched into the world year after year to scoff at and scorn everything in the shape of militarism. The result has been damaging in every way to the interests of the Empire. When first we ventured to express these views we were assured that there were no grounds for our contention that the Universities were not playing their proper part. But events would appear to have shown that there was, at least, some cause for alarm, or the letter of Dr. Huddleston would presumably not have been penned.

The University of Cambridge only now maintains a Volunteer battalion of the strength of 600, whereas without much effort it could put into the field for training annually a brigade of 2,000. We can imagine nothing more detrimental to the welfare of a scattered Empire like ours than the feeling which we regret to say has existed to a great extent both at Oxford and Cambridge, that it is lowering to a young man's social status to be seen in the uniform of a private, even in the University Rifle Battalion. No wonder in these circumstances that commanding officers of Militia and Volunteers in the piping times of peace experience difficulty in finding men of the right stamp to take commissions. It is not as easy as it might seem, perhaps, to induce the public, who do not look much below the surface, to grasp fully the part that the Universities might play in promoting the interests of the nation under the head of national defence. As Dr. Huddleston puts it, the present difficulty "lies not so much with parents or with the War Office as with the Universities, which naturally cannot be expected to take so great and novel a step"—as to put pressure on undergraduates to bear arms—"unless they feel that they have behind them a preponderance of public support." Their ought to be no doubts on that head. We have seen lately how deep rooted the martial enthusiasm of the Empire is. It is the duty of the governing bodies of the Universities to encourage that spirit in every way possible. By doing so they will go a long way to stave off universal service if they desire to do so.

It is in these matters for the educated classes to help the War Office; but if, as we grieve to say has hitherto been the case, the educated classes set a bad example, what can the War Office do? It can only fill commissions in Militia and Volunteers anyhow. The condition of things is most unfortunate, as a high authority admitted some time ago. As he said, "With the Universities doing all in their power to injure the Militia and Volunteers by means of a policy of scornful neglect, it is useless for us to appeal to the landed gentry to accept their obligations. They shrug their shoulders and say they would prefer to stand aside." It is this lamentable condition of affairs that the Universities of Cambridge and Oxford are at length endeavouring to mend. They have our best wishes, and we promise that they shall always command also our warmest support, for the movement now being set on foot will do more, we believe, in the long run to benefit the Army, Militia, Yeomanry, and Volunteers than any number of rifle clubs started under the auspices of knights and dames of the Primrose League—a feature which every thoughtful man throughout the length and breadth of the United Kingdom ought to do everything in his power to prevent the success of, having regard to the immense mischief which success would produce.

Army Notes.

With our issue of this week, we present our readers with a portrait of Field-Marshal Lord Roberts, V.C., Commander-in-Chief of the Forces in South Africa. What the personality of Major-General Baden-Powell was to Mafeking, the personality of Lord Roberts has been to the progress of the war as a whole. The announcement of his appointment to the position of Commander-in-Chief was made in the darkest hours of December, when the nation was reeling from successive shocks of disaster and disappointment and the Army in the field depressed by the continued failure of our generals to outmanœuvre the Boers. At once the Empire thrilled with hope; the magnetism of an old and tried leader exerted all its old spell, and this, so potent is a personality, before he left the shores of England at all. In South Africa the effect of his presence worked a transformation. Disaster was changed into success, deadlock for rapid movements and mobility. All the earlier mistakes of the campaign were corrected. The necessity for large bodies of mounted infantry was recognised, a brigade of South African regiments formed under General Brabant, a corps of scouts raised, Burnham placed in the Commander-in-Chief's Staff, and Colonials honoured as they had before been slighted. Lord Roberts has done more. He has appealed to the imagination of the Empire as only a Celt can, and as few men in the century have been able to do. Cronje was captured on Majuba Day. The Vaal was crossed on the Queen's Birthday. Johannesburg surrendered on Derby Day. Pretoria was entered on June 5, as though the grand old Etonian knew that the Fourth was celebrated a day later on account of Whit Monday. Never has it been honoured by an Etonian in more magnificent fashion. Such a close association of great anniversaries with the events of a campaign is unique in our annals, for the Englishman is not imaginative, which, perhaps, accounts for his success as an empire-builder. In selecting the Imperial Light Horse, which helped to defend Ladysmith, and the Kimberley Light Horse, which helped to defend Kimberley, as the strength of the Mafeking relief column, Lord Roberts again showed his imaginative quality. It is now readily admitted throughout the world that, whatever the mistakes of the South African war may have been, Lord Roberts has proved himself to be a strategist of the highest order and a wonderful man.

As usual, the Boers have managed to retreat before the arrival of Lord Roberts. But the manner of President Kruger's departure will do more to command acceptance of our rule than even a crushing defeat on the battlefield. Never, perhaps, has a pastoral people, fighting for what they conceived to be their independence, been betrayed by leaders more contemptible. Fortunately, their lies and corruption, from which the Uitlanders have suffered for twenty years, have now been used with cruel effect upon the Boers and Hollanders themselves. Hence the easy surrender of the capital, in spite of its forts, and its big guns, and all the other military preparations, which were to keep us at bay for two years. At the present moment it may be doubted if the Dutch throughout South Africa dislike us as much as they dislike one another. The official classes in the Transvaal are at issue with what remains of the Government. The Free Staters are filled with contempt and hatred of the Transvaalers for leaving them in the lurch. Both Free Staters and Transvaalers despise the Dutch of the Cape Colony for not rising in strength. As for Mr. Schreiner and Mr. Hofmeyer, they are regarded as all politicians are regarded who try to run with the hare and hunt with the hounds. Naturally these bitter feelings will die away with time, but they will greatly simplify the problem of settlement. We have to deal, not with a united people, but with a people split up into factions by the war, and, now that the goal of their ambition is snatched from them, with no end in common. It is unfortunate that guns and men have again escaped Lord Roberts, for these are more important even than the capital; but that the war will be indefinitely prolonged is a physical impossibility. The Lydenburg district is extremely difficult to operate in, but not more difficult than Natal, and the winter season is well advanced. How will the enemy feed their cattle? There is no grass in the mountains, or the Boer would not drive his flocks every year into the lowlands in search of pasture. Moreover, he has never shown the spirit of a guerilla fighter. He is not a Highlander, not even a Spaniard or a Tyrolean. Neither are the conditions of any mountainous country in Europe repeated in South Africa.

General Joubert's successor is worthy of him. With all his ability as a soldier, and his many fine qualities as a man, it was impossible for Englishmen to admire General Cronje. Potchefstroom and Brookhorst Spruit might have been forgotten, but when to these painful memories fresh bitterness was added, the past rose up in judgment against him. Joubert, though he was the most successful of the Boer generals, and loved us as little as President Kruger himself, was an honourable foe. To his humanity, courtesy, and military skill full justice was done, not only by Englishmen at the front, from Sir George White to Mr. Kipling, but by Englishmen at home. That Commandant Louis Botha is following in his steps is clear from the history of the past few weeks. When he heard that the destruction of the Johannesburg mines was contemplated by the executive at Pretoria he hurried from the front, and in a stormy scene with the President, threatened to hold the town against the Government rather than allow the people of the Transvaal to be branded as "barbarians." This was fine, and an incident which has many parallels in our own history. At Pretoria in a peculiarly difficult situation he has further distinguished himself. To him and to Mr. de Souza, the Transvaal Secretary for War, is due the credit for the wise precaution of placing British prisoners under their own officers, who were given arms. This arrangement of course held good as long as there was a prospect of rioting in the capital. Whatever happens later on, Commandant Botha, so far as he is able, will prevent, we feel sure, violations of civilised warfare.

A question of some importance will arise now that the British prisoners of war in Pretoria have been released, viz., What is to be done with them? Not, that is to say, how they shall be disposed of, but how they shall be treated. By the "Queen's Regulations," as our readers of course, know well, a court of inquiry should be assembled to investigate the circumstances in which all officers and soldiers have been taken prisoners by the enemy, "in order to prevent any officer or soldier who may have been taken prisoner of war through his own neglect or misconduct from obtaining any advantages under the Royal Warrant for pay," &c. Now, there have been some five thousand prisoners in all in the hands of the Boers from first to last. For the military authorities at the Cape to hold that number of Courts-martial would be impossible. It is not to be supposed that any such course of procedure would be thought of for a moment. The presumption is that a series of informal Courts-martial will be held, before which certain senior regimental officers and others will be called to give evidence. It is pretty well known already how it came about that many of the captures were made. To hold formal Courts, and to investigate all details would involve endless difficulty owing to the absence of many of the principal witnesses in England and elsewhere. If any attempt were made to carry out orders in their entirety, it could but result in failure. The Court before which a prisoner of war is tried is called upon to record an opinion "as to whether the officer or soldier was taken prisoner by reason of the chances of war, or through neglect or misconduct on his own part." It will be seen, therefore, how fraught with difficulty the whole matter is, having regard to the peculiar conditions under which the campaign has been fought. The best plan would be to leave the matter entirely in the hands of Lord Roberts, and give him full powers. An officer of his standing and experience would be well able to form a judgment as to the most expeditious and effective course to be pursued. But even this arrangement would not, we fear, satisfy certain carping critics at St. Stephen's, who, though ready to admit that Lord Roberts has shown the greatest capacity as a commander in the field, consider, doubtless, that they are far better able to decide matters of administrative detail than the veteran Field-Marshal and all his generals put together.

It would be difficult to over-estimate the gravity of the situation in China. Since Japan exposed the weakness of its colossal neighbour, the rivalries of the Great Powers have been transferred to the Eastern Pacific, with the result that Russia, Germany, and France are actually preying on the Empire—England and Japan, the two nations most vitally interested in its future, meanwhile looking on. That they will be forced into action by the march of events is almost certain, and this is bound to light up a conflagration such as the world has never yet witnessed. The Far Eastern policy of the Government has been universally condemned, and with reason; but, unless we are to convert China into a second Egypt, which would certainly precipitate the inevitable disastrously for ourselves, vigorous action is impossible. English Ministers must know, too, that if administration in China is decaying, the people are very much alive, and they number four hundred millions. The average European is too fond of taking it for granted that the Great Powers are to be the only active factors in the situation, while China herself is to play a perfectly passive part. Will she? As we know by experience in the Straits Settlements, the Chinese are anything but a docile people. Hence, when the elements of disorder are once let loose in the land, there is no telling where they may end. The rising has, perhaps, little significance now; the Taiping Rebellion had little when it began, but when it is secretly encouraged by the authorities in Peking, it has every chance of developing with a rapidity that will astonish more than one Power unpleasantly. It is always the unexpected that happens, and this is especially true in the East. A militant China is not a prospect that the world can view with equanimity.

For the present no steps will be taken for filling the vacant Command-in-Chief in India. General Sir Power Palmer will continue to officiate pending a decision; but, as it is the turn of a "Queen's officer" to fill the appointment, an endeavour will be made to find one to undertake the duties directly the state of affairs existing in South Africa affords the military authorities an opportunity of weighing over deliberately the claims and recommendations of those who are eligible. As yet the question has not been gone into seriously, it being felt that for the moment the command is well placed in the hands of Sir Power Palmer, whose rank and experience are such as to remove all the difficulties of an interregnum. There are reports that Lord Kitchener will be offered the appointment on return from South Africa, but nothing has transpired in official quarters to give countenance to these rumours; indeed, everything points the other way, if one is to give any credence to statements of those who ought to know what the wishes of the Government are. Lord Kitchener has had no experience of India. His appointment, able administrator as he admittedly is, would be one of doubtful expediency, more particularly having regard to the fact that there are officers senior to him who do possess all the qualifications necessary for the discharge of the duties of this command, some of whom it would be an injustice to supersede. But there is no disguising that an important question of seniority has arisen, and the effect of this may be to settle matters in a manner which many in India would prefer, having regard to Sir Power Palmer's long service, distinguished war record, and local associations.

"Superseded," writing to the Times from South Africa, protests against the treatment which the Militia has received during the war which is happily drawing to a close. We have expressed our views too frequently for it to be necessary for us to say now how cordially we agree with this writer on the points he raises. Some years ago many of the most prominent Militia officers took exception to the attitude we assumed with respect to the territorial system. We objected to it, as we said, on broad grounds, because we recognised the serious disadvantages under which the Militia would labour if the principles of that system were carried to their legitimate conclusion in time of war. If Militia officers accept the argument of "Superseded," they must see that our fears were justified. Our contention always has been that the territorial system, sound as it is in principle, was established more or less for political ends, and not on a proper basis for the improvement of our armed forces as a whole. It gave the Militia gold lace, brass buttons, and high-sounding titles, which were, no doubt, gratifying to those who were satisfied to accept the shadow of reform at the sacrifice of the substance. How completely the substance has been lost the letter of "Superseded" shows to demonstration. The battalion to which he belongs, for instance, had to give 250 Reservists to its line battalion. Within a few weeks it was asked to volunteer for active service, and it did. It embarked 600 strong. Its arrangements were "quickly and quietly made, without public subscription or outside help." Yet what is the reward? Supersession, disappointment and disgust. "I was under the impression," "Superseded" writes, "that a Militia battalion on embodiment became a line battalion to all intents and purposes, and that the officers took their rank as such, but the similitude to the Line appears to extend no further than pay, up to which point the Militia officer is a distinct loser," which is exactly what we have always said would be the case. There is a saying that in certain conditions one man enjoys the turkey whilst another has to be satisfied with the goose. This is exactly the state of things created for the Militia under our present territorial organisation, and the war in South Africa seems to have proved the fact conclusively. But it has taken Militia officers some time to realise how absolutely one-sided the whole business has been. Our Militia friends will now, perhaps, be better able to appreciate our attitude with respect to territorialism. They have our fullest sympathy. They have been placed in a most unfortunate position, and have borne themselves in stress of circumstances admirably, as might have been expected; but it behoves them to profit by their lesson, and, if they do, it will tend greatly to bring about that better understanding which is necessary to enable those who are pleading their cause in both Houses of Parliament to press for a more practical development of system which will place all services on a better footing.

We quite agree with Captain Gall, whose letter to the Times last Saturday on the supply of officers has attracted considerable attention, that it is the duty of the War Office to make known on the earliest possible date its intentions for the future. Mr. Wyndham has stated very clearly what the steps are which it is proposed to take to meet existing demands. These, of course, are exceptionally heavy, so that exceptional measures have had to be taken in order that vacancies may be filled promptly. But it would never do to allow the present very unsatisfactory arrangements to become permanent, as it is most desirable, if the educational standard of our officers is to be maintained, that some test should be prescribed whereby their fitness for commissions can be gauged before appointment. Captain Gall deals more particularly with the Militia aspect of the case. It is quite true, as he says, that just before the war the Militia was nearly 1,000 officers short of its full establishment, and that now the cadres of nearly all regiments are full. But the young officers who have joined the Militia lately have done so in most cases with the view of obtaining commissions in the Army without examination. This cannot be good either for the Militia or the Army, for, if all hopes are realised—and there is no reason for supposing that they will not be—matters in a short time will be as bad as ever again. These spasmodic outbursts of patriotism do not last long in a go-ahead age such as that in which we live. Very soon the War Office, if it is not mindful, will be brought face to face with a big difficulty, and it is as well that it should grasp the situation in time, and not put off the consideration of means until the pressure comes. It has ever been its practice to do this so far as the military examinations are concerned, and the result has not been such as to justify it in continuing a policy so eminently unbusinesslike now when there is every indication that for some time to come the demand will be greater than the supply. It is due to the parents of young men who are aspiring to commissions that they should be made aware what the steps are which it is necessary for them to take to prepare their sons for the profession of arms. It has to be remembered that there are few boys who can go up for an examination without preparation of some kind, and that success largely depends on the care with which the youthful mind has been trained. At present parents are in complete ignorance as to the official intentions; indeed from what we gather officials are equally uncertain as to the direction which any changes of system will take. We do not quite follow Captain Gall in all his proposals, but we do entirely agree with him when he says that "public schoolmasters must not be allowed to dictate to the War Office." There is, unfortunately, a tendency to play into the hands of the public schools. This is a great mistake, for the order of things ought to be reversed, otherwise not only mischief but great injustice may be done. The time is fast approaching, it seems to us, when a small but practical committee of members of Parliament, drawn say from past and present visitors to the Royal Military Academy and Royal Military College, or, at any rate, composed largely of such independent persons, should be formed to consider and report upon the means best calculated to keep up a supply of candidates without injuring the chances of the sons of poor officers who cannot afford, as a rule, to give their children a public school education.

Major-General H. R. Abadie, C.B., having been relieved of his command of the Eastern District, on Monday, by Major-General Sir William Gatacre, left Liverpool on Wednesday, accompanied by Colonel J. A. Man Stuart, C.M.G., 3rd. Batn. Gordon Highlanders, for the West Coast of Africa. General Abadie has been selected for this special service in view of possible contingencies, whilst Colonel Man Stuart will take up on arrival the appointment of Commandant at the base. General Abadie's ultimate employment will largely depend on the condition of things when he lands on the coast about the 20th inst. It is now recognised that the situation may assume a grave aspect, and it has been deemed expedient to make arrangements accordingly. If the worst comes to the worst, it will at least be a source of satisfaction to know that there is on the spot a general officer of experience to assume the direction of affairs. The military authorities have the fullest confidence in Colonel Willcocks and Lieut.-Colonel Carter, who are now in command of the relief columns. At the same time, they cannot close their eyes to the fact that the climate of the West Coast is very unhealthy. As soon as General Abadie arrives he will be able to report on the state of things generally. Meanwhile the military authorities do not view the present troubles with alarm, and it has to be remembered that Lord Wolseley and Sir Evelyn Wood both rendered valuable service on the West Coast in 1873-74, and ought, therefore, to know well what is best to be done to protect our interests at the present moment. Unfortunately the news to hand during the week has not thrown much light on matters; but in a day or so Colonel Willcocks will move forward in command of the main column for Kumasi, where Sir Frederick Hodgson is understood still to be besieged.

The staff and cadets of the Royal Military Academy have started a quarterly of their own, the R.M.A. Magazine. The first number is before us and promises well, printed and got up as it is in the best style by Messrs. Cattermole, of Artillery Place. The magazine will appear in the middle and at the end of each term, and the committee of management rely upon old cadets doing all they can to make the enterprise a success. One of the main objects of the magazine will be to promote the welfare of "the shop." It is proposed that it shall be a record of events and also a connecting link between officers R.A. and R.E. all over the world, and the establishment at which they received their first ideas of military life. Judging by the high standard of the initial number, this idea ought to be fully realised. There is much to be said, certainly, in favour of a publication like this, especially at a time like the present, when efforts are being made to raise the establishment of both the "scientific corps," and when there is every prospect of the personnel of the two "corps" being more scattered than ever as the result of new systems and increased spheres of duty.

There are two articles in Blackwood's Magazine in relation to the war that are particularly interesting. An anonymous writer discusses the present condition of the cavalry, and remarks upon the tendency which has existed among high authorities to depreciate that arm. Even those regiments, he says, which were supposed to be in the highest state of preparedness had been depleted by furnishing strong drafts to the Indian army, and were flooded with Reservists to bring them up to war strength, and when they landed in South Africa the English troop horses entirely collapsed. In relation to this matter, the writer is of opinion that our horses are much too coarsely bred, and the majority of them, more or less, flat-catchers. The fact is that horse breeding has been left entirely in this country to private enterprise, and that the conditions do not exist as in France or Germany to take efficient care that no animals are born which are not entitled by descent to health, strength, and soundness. The writer knows what he is talking about, and he tells us that the standard quality of horses abroad is steadily improving. He also lays great stress upon the effect of drafting immature horses, through want of transition depôts, to regiments and batteries; whereas, in Continental armies, the remounts are bought young, but are never reckoned on the effective strength until they are six years old. Again, the writer points out that the three squadron arrangement in the field is awkward and anomalous. As to the regiments which were not supposed to be ready for service, he describes them as in the last stage of feebleness and decrepitude. In the first class of regiments the men were rusty in their military knowledge, but in the others the officers and non-commissioned officers had for years had little opportunity of practising even the simplest manoeuvres. The writer has also a great deal to say about the ill-effect of sending horses newly-landed immediately on service, and upon the great necessity of providing the cavalry with a long-range arm.

The other article to which we refer is by Major, General Frank S. Russell, who asks the question "Why have we Surprises in War?" His answer is simple and deserves quotation:—

"The science of war requires constant practice, like every other science, and the opportunity of this constant practice has not been afforded by the Government to the larger proportion of our officers and men. Foreign countries have long since recognised that only by annual manoeuvres, and by constant exercise of every portion of troops in small bodies, can any army be trained efficiently to fulfil the part which they will be called to play in the event of war. How differently have we treated our soldiers! It is true that after the French and German war we had a hot fit for a couple of years, a Manoeuvre Act was passed, and a certain sum of money voted by Parliament to carry out these exercises. But the hot fit passed away very quickly, and until 1898 no general facilities have been given to our Army at home to render themselves efficient for the condition of actual warfare. The general officers cannot be blamed; no powers were given them by Parliament to manoeuvre over ground; and as regards money they were miserably stinted, so much so that in the exercises which they managed with much energy and by dint of great tact and trouble to carry out, it was found necessary to lay it down as a condition that officers attending them as staff, umpires, and suchlike should bear all their own expenses. Can any one realise such short-sighted parsimony even from a purely commercial point of view! It would be difficult to estimate how much some of these 'untoward incidents' have cost the country, quite apart from the valuable lives sacrificed."

We do not find anything particularly interesting about the war in our foreign Service contemporaries. Some of them cheerfully recognise our success, though generally attributing it to our "big battalions," while a few still have great hopes of the success of the Boers in guerilla warfare. One of the Berlin organs hazarded the suggestion that Lord Roberts would march eastward to take the Boers at Volkrust in the rear, and enable Sir Redvers Buller to advance through Laing's Nek. In the various criticisms, however, we do not find much "light and leading." The foreign writers as a rule have not raised themselves in the estimation of thoughtful men. Their reviews of the military situation generally speaking have been marked by a complete absence of knowledge of the subject with which they have dealt.

The proposed additions of four cavalry regiments and seven batteries of Horse Artillery to the Regular Army are highly satisfactory. Had the South African War never happened they would have been imperatively called for to bring up the fixed military establishments to something approaching present Imperial requirements. They are also a concession to the advocates of increased mobility. The war in which we are still engaged has, however, so strikingly illustrated the immense importance of a high degree of mobility, that no organisation will be perfect or satisfactory that does not include, in the establishments of the higher units of both cavalry and infantry, a force of mounted infantry, or, as we prefer to call them, mounted riflemen. For each cavalry brigade, and attached to it, there should be a battalion of mounted riflemen, permanently maintained and horsed. This would make the strength of the cavalry brigade about 2,500 combatants, and that of a division approximately 5,000. The combinations of cavalry and mounted infantry under that distinguished cavalry leader General French has worked admirably, and has conducted not a little to the recent marked successes attending the British arms. The experience gained in the distant field of South Africa will no doubt be utilised by our military authorities, and no part of it is more important than that derived from the mobility of the enemy, and the necessity that compelled our generals to copy them in the matter of mobility if they were to succeed. But mounted infantry should also form part of each infantry brigade in the field. A brigade now consists of four battalions, of which each finds a mounted company. A better organisation would be three foot battalions at full strength, with one battalion of mounted riflemen. The strength would still be approximately 4,000 combatants. The mounted rifle battalion of an infantry brigade should be maintained as a distinct unit during peace, but need not be permanently horsed, although under certain circumstances it might be expedient or necessary to keep at some outstations a nucleus of horses. For the rest, the farmers and owners of property surrounding garrisons should be encouraged, by payment of a retaining fee, to breed and maintain small suitable animals (cobs), which should be available at all times for use during the drill and route-marching seasons, and should be at Government disposal for purchase in war time.

AN experimental mobilisation of the troops in the Thames District will take place from Aug. 3 to Aug. 7. The works will be manned as they would be manned in time of war, and Regulars, Militia, and Volunteers will be included in the mobilisation.

Pursuant to a resolution passed at a general court of the Clothworkers' Company, held on the 2nd ult., on the motion of the Master, Mr. A. C. Cronin, seconded by Viscount Cross, a Past Master, Lieut.-General Sir George White, V.C., was admitted on Wednesday evening to the freedom and livery of the Company. The ceremony took place in the drawing-room of the Company's hall, in the presence of the Master and court and a large number of ladies and gentlemen, among whom were Lady White and Miss White, Lady Cross, and Lady Kelvin. The secretary, Sir Owen Roberts, read the resolution of the court, and afterwards "the declaration of a freeman," which was subscribed in the usual way by Sir George White. The newly-elected freeman was then conducted by Sir Owen Roberts to the Master's table, where he was robed as a liveryman, the Master briefly congratulating him, and presenting him with an illuminated certificate of his freedom, together with certain pieces of plate—four dessert dishes, two sugar casters, and two coffee pots, in silver, handsomely engraved. Sir George White briefly responded. A dinner was afterwards given by the company to meet the newly-elected freeman. The Master presided. The Master proposed the health of "Our New Liveryman," dwelling on the eminent services which had been rendered by Sir George White in various parts of the Empire, and notably as "the Defender of Ladysmith." The toast was drunk with great cordiality. Sir George White responded.

The Paris Liberté publishes a letter which Lord Methuen has addressed to Mademoiselle de Villebois Mareuil on the occasion of the death of her father:—

"Boshof, May 10, 1900.

"Mademoiselle,—I send you a photograph of the marble monument which I have had placed in the Boshof Cemetery to your father's memory. I hope to be able to find the ring which he was wearing. If I do, I will send it you. I was not able to bury your father's body in a Roman Catholic cemetery, as I am sure you would have desired, but the Catholic prayers were said by the Comte de Breda, and military honours were rendered. We all regret the death of this loyal and accomplished soldier, but he preferred to die rather than surrender. Let me send you the sympathy of myself and my comrades in your sorrow. —Yours, &c., "METHUEN,

"General in command of the Fifth Division."

There is not a soldier who will not commend Lord Methuen for his chivalrous action in this matter.

Colonel A. G. Raper, A.Q.M.G., is specially retained on the active list in view of his early promotion to the rank of Major-General. Colonel Raper has proved himself to be a staff officer of such exceptional ability that his enforced retirement would be a distinct loss to the Service, and nowhere, we venture to think, will a voice be raised against his retention. The work he has done in connection with the despatch of the field army to South Africa has been enormous, and it is in recognition of this largely that he has been favoured.

It has suddenly been discovered that Colonel R. S. R. Fetherstonhaugh, who commanded a brigade under Lord Methuen during the earlier phases of the war in South Africa, and was obliged to come home on account of his wound, has never been gazetted. So the omission is made right, his appointment being dated from November 13, 1899. It is necessary to make this explanation, as some seem to imagine that Colonel Fetherstonhaugh, having recovered, is returning to South Africa to take up a fresh command.

Colonel J. Leach is to be commandant of the Royal Artillery practice camp at Okehampton this year; Colonel F. A. Yorke of that at Glen Imaal (county Wicklow); Colonel A. J. Nixon of that at the Western Ports, Isle of Wight; and Lieut.-Colonel H. C. C. Walker of that at Lydd.

Colonel J. E. Broadbent, C.B., R.E., who attained the age limit some time ago is still continued in employment in the Indian Public Works Department. This is due, we understand, to the fact that the question of age disqualification is under the consideration of the Secretary of State for India, and it was thought undesirable to disturb Colonel Broadbent pending a final decision.

Colonel F. C. Keyser, C.B., retired list, late of the Royal Fusiliers, has been appointed to the command of the 3rd. Batn. Royal Northern Reserve Regiment.

Colonel F. Glennie, Commandant of the Royal Military School of Music, Kneller Hall, would in ordinary circumstances vacate his appointment to-morrow and be placed on the retired list for age, but owing to the drain caused by the war he retains his position until December 10, when he will be retired under the conditions of the Royal warrant.

Lieut.-Colonel F. Lloyd, D.S.O., 1st Batn. Grenadier Guards, was returned as severely wounded after Sir Leslie Rundle's brilliant and hardly fought action on the 29th ult. From an account of the engagement given by Reuter's correspondent, the gallant and popular officer seems to have had a narrow escape:—

"Gen. Rundle's action at Bidulphberg on the 29th has had more far-reaching results than were ever anticipated. The Boers had evidently intended to menace the railway and prevent reinforcements reaching the garrison of Lindley, which Sir H. Colville holds. By advancing from Senekal Gen. Rundle drew off all the Boer forces to meet him. The enemy apparently thought he was marching on Bethlehem. They were, in fact, completely nonplussed by Gen. Rundle's action, and they have now entirely lost their chances of cutting off one, or perhaps both, of the forces they menaced. Not only so, but they now find themselves almost surrounded by British troops who held Ficksburg, Senekal, Heilbron, and Lindley. All the wounded in Tuesday's fight are now comfortably housed in Senekal. Col. Lloyd, of the Grenadiers, who was hit no fewer than three times, is doing well. His wounds would have been fatal but for the bravery of Drummer Haynes. It appears that Haynes was trying to relieve the colonel's pain after he fell, when a fourth bullet struck Haynes's hand, which he had placed on one of the colonel's wounds. The ball glanced up the drummer's arm, otherwise it would undoubtedly have struck the colonel in a vital part."

Four commanding officers of Indian native regiments have during the last week completed their terms of appointment, viz.:—Colonel C. W. J. Hingston, 10th Bengal Infantry; J. H. Jones, 2nd Madras Infantry; H. R. D. Thomas, 4th Madras Infantry; and H. M. Mason, 4th Hyderabad Lancers.

WAR SUMMARY.

Saturday, June 2.

Lord Roberts, in a despatch issued from the War Office to-day, described the incidents connected with the occupation of Johannesburg on the 31st ult. All passed off satisfactorily, thanks to the excellent arrangements made by Dr. Krause, the Transvaal Commandant. Order prevailed throughout the town. Dr. Krause met Lord Roberts at the entrance to Johannesburg and rode by his side to the Government offices, where the heads of the several departments were introduced. All acceded to the request of the Commander-in-Chief that they would continue to carry on their respective duties until relieved. Johannesburg was very empty, but a crowd of people assembled in the main square by the time the British flag was being hoisted. The Royal salute and three cheers for the Queen were given. At the end of the ceremony the 11th and 7th Divisions marched past, with the Naval Brigade, the heavy artillery, and two brigade divisions of Royal Field Artillery. Lieut.-Gen. Ian Hamilton's column and the Cavalry Division and Mounted Infantry were too far away to take part in the ceremony. The 14th (Wavell's) Brigade was left in Johannesburg to preserve order, while the remainder of the force encamped north of the town on the Pretoria road. Friday night passed quietly, and to-day the shops reopened, while large numbers of people voluntarily surrendered arms and ponies. It was found on inspection to-day that only three guns had been left in the forts.

Details came to hand of the fighting on the 30th ult., in which the Queensland Mounted Infantry rendered "splendid service." They captured a Creusot gun and waggon and 11 waggons of military stores. Commandant Botha, of Zoutpansberg, his field cornet, and 100 others, including several foreigners, were taken prisoners by them.

There was news from Natal, where there has been practically a cessation of hostilities for four days. Gen. Hildyard had rejoined the main force from Utrecht. Gen. Lyttelton was at Coetzee's Drift protecting the right flank. Extensive patrolling by cavalry from Dannbauser, in the direction of Buffalo River, during Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday had failed to discover the enemy, their inactivity due, it was supposed, to their finding that their communications with Pretoria were being cut off. "It is difficult," wrote the special correspondent of the Morning Post, "for the Boers round Laing's Nek to realise that Johannesburg is ours."

Sunday, June 3.

Gen. Colville reported the arrival of the Highland Brigade at Heilbron on the 29th ult., and stated that he was opposed more or less the whole way from Ventersburg. Gen. Rundle reported casualties in his recent operations which amounted to 30 killed and 150 wounded. Official intimation received that Sir Charles Warren, with a force of 700, was surrounded and attacked at Faberspruit on the 30th ult. by 1,000 rebels. The enemy was repulsed. A Reuter telegram from Maseru stated that Gens. Brabant and Rundle had surrounded the Boers opposed to them near Ficksburg. The Boers could only escape across the Basutoland border, where the Basutos were waiting for them.

Monday, June 4.

According to his own account, telegraphed from Six Miles Spruit at 8.40 p.m., Lord Roberts started at daybreak, and marched about ten miles to the Six Miles Spruit, both banks of which were occupied by the enemy. Henry's and Ross's Mounted Infantry, with the West Somerset, Dorset, Bedford, and Sussex companies of Yeomanry, quickly dislodged them from the south bank, and pursued them for nearly a mile, when they found themselves under a heavy fire from guns which the Boers had placed on a well-concealed and commanding position. Our heavy guns—Naval and Royal Artillery—which had purposely been placed in the front part of the column, were hurried on to the assistance of the Mounted Infantry as fast as the oxen and mules could travel over the great rolling hills by which Pretoria is surrounded. The guns were supported by Stephenson's Brigade of Pole-Carew's Division, and, after firing a few rounds, drove the enemy out of their positions. The Boers then attempted to turn our left flank. In this they were again foiled by the Mounted Infantry and Yeomanry, supported by Maxwell's Brigade of Tucker's Division. As, however, they still kept pressing the left rear, Gen. Ian Hamilton, who was advancing three miles to the left, was ordered by Lord Roberts to incline towards the main body and fill up the gap between the two columns. This finally checked the enemy, who were driven back towards Pretoria. Lord Roberts hoped, he says, that he would have been able to follow up the retreat, but the days are now, of course, very short in that part of the world so after 12 hours' hard fighting he and his troops were left no alternative but to bivouac on the ground gained during the day. When his message left the Guards Brigade was "quite near to the most southern of the five forts by which Pretoria is defended, and less than four miles from the town." French, with the 3rd and 4th Cavalry Brigade, and Hutton's Mounted Infantry, was to the north of Pretoria. Broadwood's Cavalry Brigade was between French's and Ian Hamilton's columns, and Gen. Gordon, with the Lancer Brigade, was watching the right flank of the main force not far from the railway bridge at Irene Station, which had been destroyed by the enemy.

Tuesday, June 5.

Shortly after mid-day a despatch reached the War Office from Lord Roberts—it was sent off at 11.40 a.m.—to this effect: "We are now in possession of Pretoria. The official entry will be made this afternoon at two o'clock."

According to Lord Roberts's official account, sent off at 12.55 to-day, the enemy last night were beaten back from nearly all the positions they had been holding. Ian Hamilton's Mounted Infantry followed them up to within 2,000 yards of Pretoria, through which they retreated hastily. De Lisle then sent an officer with a flag of truce into the town demanding its surrender in Lord Roberts's name. Shortly before midnight the Commander-in-Chief was awake by two officials of the South African Republic, Mr. Sandberg, military secretary to Commandant-Gen. Botha, and a general officer of the Boer Army, who brought a letter from Botha proposing an armistice for the purpose of settling terms of surrender. To this Lord Roberts replied that he would gladly meet the Commandant-General the next morning, but that he was not prepared to discuss any terms, as the surrender of the town must be unconditional. He asked for a reply by daybreak, as he had ordered the troops to march on the town as soon as it was light. In his reply Botha told Lord Roberts that he had decided not to defend Pretoria, and that he trusted the women, children, and property would be protected. At 1 a.m. to-day, while on the line of march, his lordship was met by three of the principal officials with a flag of truce, stating their wish to surrender the town. It was arranged that Pretoria should be taken possession of by her Majesty's troops at two o'clock. Mrs. Botha and Mrs. Kruger were both in Pretoria. Some few of the British prisoners had been taken away, but the majority were still at Waterval.

The news was officially received at Balmoral over her Majesty's private wire. After the Queen had been informed the Union Jack was immediately run up alongside the Royal Standard, and retainers and estate officials, led by Mr. Forbes, assembled in front of the Castle and gave three cheers for her Majesty and the Army. On receipt of the news in Ballater church bells were rung, bunting displayed, and the Queen's guard of honour turned out and fired a feu de joie.

Telegraphing from Pretoria Station to-day Lord Roberts announced a disaster to the 13th (Irish) Batn. Imperial Yeomanry, under command of Lieut.-Col. Spragge, D.S.O., on the 31st ult. The official account says:—

"I regret to report that the 13th Batn. Imperial Yeomanry had to surrender to a very superior force of the enemy on May 31 near Lindley. On receiving information of the battalion being attacked I ordered Lord Methuen to proceed with all speed to its assistance. Methuen was then one march on the Heilbron side of Kroonstad, and half an hour after receipt of my telegram on June 1 he started off. By 10 a.m. the following day he had marched 44 miles in 25 hours, but was too late to rescue Spragge's Yeomanry. Methuen attacked the Boers, between two and three thousand strong, and, after a running fight of five hours, completely routed the enemy. It is a very regrettable circumstance, but I trust that it will not be very long before the Irish Yeomanry are released from captivity."

The official statement of the companies and officers of the 13th Batn. is:—

Commander, Lieut.-Col. B. E. Spragge, D.S.O.; Second in Command, Lieut.-Col. A. G. Holland; Adjutant, Capt. E. R. Robinson; Qrmr. H. E. Dickinson; Medical Officer, F. A. Hadley, M.B.; Vet.-Surg. E. A. E. Fenner; Machine Gun Commander, Lieut. H. J. Smith. 46. IRISH (BELFAST).—Capt. B. A. Maude; Lieuts. Sir J. Power, J. Craig, C. D. Rutledge, H. Montgomery. 54. IRISH (BELFAST).—Capt. J. F. Humby; Lieuts. F. J. Montgomery, J. R. Mitchell, C. S. Donnelly, the Earl of Leitrim. 45. IRISH (DUBLIN).—Capt. Lord Longford; Lieuts. Lord Ennismore, H. Villiers Stuart, T. R. Stannuss, J. G. Blackburne. 47. LORD DONOUGHMORE'S CORPS.—Capt. C. L. Keith, dead; Lieuts. R. Alexander, A. P. Lane, C. M. Robin, W. B. Du Pre, R. Osborne Milliard (special).

WHOLESALE FROM—

MESSRS. TEOFANI & CO., 18, BURY ST., ST. MARY AXE, LONDON, E.C.

In a message sent from Pretoria at 5.30 p.m., Lord Roberts said that the occupation of the city had passed off most satisfactorily, and that the British flag had been hoisted over the Government offices. The troops marched past through the square, which was lined by the 3rd Batn. Grenadier Guards. Only a few of the cavalry and mounted infantry were able to take part in the ceremony, the remainder being on duty at some distance round the town. The reception accorded to the troops, Lord Roberts remarked, was much more enthusiastic than he had anticipated. Several British officers who had been prisoners were among the onlookers.

Wednesday, June 6.

The Court Circular to-night contained an announcement as to the satisfaction with which the Queen heard of the surrender of Pretoria. Her Majesty to-day sent replies to the Corporations of the principal cities in the United Kingdom acknowledging the congratulatory messages addressed to her on the event. Lord Salisbury telegraphed to Lord Roberts, earnestly congratulating him on "the crowning result of his brilliant strategy and the devotion of the soldiers."

Thursday, June 7.

There was practically no news of military movements. The Special Correspondent of the Times at Pretoria telegraphed that 129 British officers who were prisoners there have been freed. A Reuter despatch from Lorenzo Marques stated that the Boers are moving the British prisoners to Nooitgedacht, in the Elands Valley, a most unhealthy locality, 1,000 having been conveyed thither on Tuesday and Wednesday. It was reported that the Boers are making a stand near Hatherley, about 12 miles east of Pretoria, for the purpose of gaining time.

A list of the casualties to the companies of Imperial Yeomanry who had to surrender at Lindley was issued.

Friday, June 8.

Some further news respecting the occupation of Pretoria. It seems probable that some of the Boer guns were captured, and it is certain that at least two machine guns were taken. The Boers lost heavily in the fighting preliminary to the occupation. Mrs. Kruger is still at the Presidency, but the burghers have been replaced by a British guard.

Other news to hand to-day is to this effect:—Earl Delawarr, who is now at Durban, has given some details of the disaster to Bethune's Horse. He was acting as A.D.C. to Col. Bethune, who sent him to the Captains of E. and D. squadrons with orders to retire, but he found that E. squadron was practically surrounded. It was in returning under a heavy fire that Earl Delawarr endeavoured to save a trooper, and was himself attacked by twenty Boers and wounded, help arriving when he had given up all hope.

Col. Plumer occupied Zeerust on May 28 without fighting. The officials offered to take the oath of allegiance if they could be afforded protection from their countrymen. Major-Gen. Baden-Powell is administering the districts of Malmani and Zeerust.

The Kimberley Light Horse has been disbanded, but the Diamond Fields Horse will continue in commission for some time.

Gen. Rundle, with Colonials and Imperial troops, reconnoitred the enemy's position near Hammonia on Monday. The Boer laager was located in a strong position eight miles to the north-east, but no fighting took place.

The Central News correspondent telegraphs that the great body of burghers in the Orange Colony are heartily sick of the war, and are likely to lay down their arms in a few days.

Mr. Hollis, the United States Consul at Lorenzo Marques, has visited Mr. Kruger at Machadosdorp, it is rumoured, with a suggestion from the Washington Government that the ex-President should treat for peace. It is denied, however, at Washington that Mr. Hollis has any such authority.

President Kruger took away with him two and a half millions in gold. Seven guns were removed from the town. Before his departure, Attorney-General Smuts compelled the bank officials to hand over all the available gold, which he took away.

The officers of the staff of the Guards' Brigade had paid a visit to the Presidency. They were received by a Dutch clergyman who explained that Mrs. Kruger was still in residence there. The clergyman invited the officers into the porch, where they were shortly joined by the President's wife. Mrs. Kruger appeared perfectly composed, and exchanged courtesies with her visitors. The commanding officer then notified Mrs. Kruger of his intention to replace the burghers guarding the Presidency by a guard of British soldiers.

WITH Vanity Fair of the 14th inst. will be given a portrait of Lieut.-Gen. Sir George White by the well-known artist "Spv." On the 21st one of Lord Roberts, and on the 28th of Capt. the Hon. Hedworth Lambton. In each case the gallant officers will be pictured in uniform. The excellence of the cartoons given in Vanity Fair is a guarantee that full justice will be done on this occasion to the heroes of the war.

THE FIRST DUTY OF STATESMEN.

AN ARMED NATION.

On the continent of Europe at present standing armies are merely schools to which the successive generations of the nation's manhood come to learn for a few years the art of war, and from which each generation returns during peace to the usual everyday toils of bread-winning except for a short annual training. The Army then no longer dominates the nation; it is no longer segregated from the nation; it is not, with the exception of the German corps of officers, a class or a caste apart. As Bernhardt says, it is an emanation of the nation; its feelings are those of the nation. In France reciprocally the nation feels with the Army; so in Switzerland the soldiers when mobilised are the pets of the nation. All Swiss folk look back to their military service days as English richer folk look back to the exercises and discipline, albeit accompanied with meagre fare, of their public schools.

In future wars will be national and occasioned not only by such well calculated ambitious schemes as influence Russian policy, where the people follow the Czar, whose voice stands to them for that of God, or the fierce fanaticism of the Osmanli, whose devotion to the Prophet only needs an able Sultan or a wild Mahdi to stir up strife from the Hindu Koosh to the Adriatic, from the Persian Gulf to the Atlantic, from the Balkans to the Equator.

It seems as if the wars of America and Western Europe may be far more desperate, costly, and unreasonable. The service of Allah is a nobler motive than the greed of gain; the steady patriotism of the Russian peasant far superior to the wild cries and hideous orgies of the mobs of Northern Italy, Southern France, Paris, Chicago, and New York. Whatever merit can be found among the dwellers in modern hives of industry is next to religion to be found in connection with drill, military education, military service, and discipline. Without these obligations the universal instruction of the people rapidly becomes a curse to the masses.

But in proportion as popular passion will supersede statesmanship, and dynastic schemes and diplomatic adroitness and procrastination be rudely swept aside by the caprices of demagogues and the license of an anonymous press, or the venom of party scribes, so much the more reason for serious preparation for war in times of peace and calm. In these epochs wise organisers, foresight, knowledge, fair play and greatness may be sown to posterity, even if wars break out at the instance of public emotion, internecine jealousy, and the madness of the half-instructed and semi-civilised savages who crowd some modern cities—Yahoos, as the late Major Thurston calls them. The disciplined, drilled and well-armed state will forthwith overrun its adversary. The justice or injustice of the cause matters not in the least, or Alaric, Attila, Timourlane, and Napoleon would have never emerged from obscurity. When big battalions throng the war appeals to Providence are in vain. Victories cannot be won by miracles; gunners care nothing about abstract principles.

Assuredly, after Sedan, the cause of France was as just as that of Germany, but all the levies of Gambetta, a million armed but disorganised Frenchmen, went as sheep to the slaughter, penned, and done to death forthwith by the well-trained Germans—also in strength an embattled million.

In case of defeat the infuriated masses turn fiercely on their rulers; everyone then sees how dependent he is on military organisation. After Sedan the French Government fell at once, and the Empress Eugénie was in danger of being torn to pieces. The Germans had scarcely left the Champs Elysées when its own inhabitants began to lay Paris in ashes.

It was part of my duty to survey rejoicings over our victories in South Africa—in Dundee, in Newcastle, and in London, east, and central, and western. Surely such wild frenzied delight, such a carnival of enthusiasm, proves that our masses are in touch with our Army and its career in a manner hither unknown; and which should make our politicians in high places perpend and try and cope with, or utilise the spirit of the time.

I do not wish to depreciate the services of our officers and men—services rendered unnecessarily severe by the supineness and ignorance of our so-called leaders. Statesmen in the old sense of the term we have none. But there has been absolutely nothing, in the opinion of the officers and privates of our Army, to justify the appalling displays of folly and the utter libertinism of the disorderly patriotism of the last few months.

Ladysmith, Kimberley, Paardeberg, Mafeking, the passage of the Vaal, were all meritorious in their way, and deserved applause, although the whole war management has been a humiliating spectacle. But our Empire was not threatened by anyone except our own Cabinet Ministers; our commerce was safe. Only one small section of one small portion of our vast inheritance was seriously invaded. Now, if our people went almost mad over these victories, what would they have done and said if the heroes of these successes had been defeated instead of victorious and had been carried off to Pretoria, as well as all our artillery and all our rifles? Yet this was the case in France in September and October, 1870-1.

A storm of indignation would possibly have taught the rhetoricians and sophists and intriguers who manipulate our Government that the efficiency of national forces, defensive and offensive, ought to be the principal concern of rulers. The supreme importance of the interests now entrusted to the military representatives of a nation forbid any further trifling with the Army. The dangers from ebullitions of popular excitement may equal those of invasion. The various phases of a campaign are followed in every civilised state, from the capital in the early morning to the smallest village in the afternoon, with feverish anxiety.

A really serious collapse of either our Navy or our Army would give the country a shock from which it would not soon recover. We have met with some checks and partial reverses in modern history, but nothing serious, much less of vital consequence. Whether a few thousand soldiers, more or less, in the Crimea or in South Africa suffer death, or are maimed, or starved, does not produce much impression on the people, and does not ruffle the equanimity of sleek officials. Proceedings like those following upon the relief of Mafeking are no credit to a nation, and speeches such as were cheered by a superior class of people at Albert Hall are positively discreditable; those who cheered are now thoroughly ashamed of misplaced reverence.

When politicians call upon small local societies to take in charge the development and organisation of our manhood for military purposes, it is indeed well that the Gaul is not at our gates. The energies and public spirit which make people great must be directed. As Burke says wisely, "The force of our national character at the close of the seventeenth century was directed from above. Government gave the impulse. As well may we fancy that of itself the sea will swell, and that without winds the billows will insult the adverse shore, as that the mass of the people will be moved, and elevated, and continue by a steady and permanent direction to bear upon any one point, without the influence of superior authority or superior mind."

The necessity for universal military service in Great Britain, as well as on the Continent, will be the subject of another article. Even Lord Salisbury, while proving by the context that he had not the least knowledge of the military system prevailing in Switzerland, dwelt "on the necessity of placing ourselves in the position of an armed nation, such a nation, for instance, as the Swiss." It is clear that now is the psychological moment for a thorough reorganisation of our national forces on the newest model—in a fashion not merely imitative of foreign methods, but adapted to the peculiar requirements and unlimited resources of our Empire. When the present war is over, officials will be only too glad to let things slide, and the people under the influence of reaction will rapidly pass from excited and anxious patriotism into lethargic self-satisfaction and repose.

T. MILLER MAGUIRE.

ROYAL MILITARY TOURNAMENT.

The last prize awards were made known on Saturday. The challenge shield for the best man-at-arms was won by Lieut. and Rdgmr. Parker, Royal Scots Greys, who performed the feat, hitherto unprecedented, of winning all three prizes given for tent pegging, heads and posts, and lemon cutting, with full marks in each event. Lieut. Parker has in two previous years won the coveted distinction, namely, in 1897, when he last competed, and in 1894. The first prize in the driving competition for Field Artillery was won by the 92nd Battery R.F.A. and the second by the 10th Battery R.F.A. The first prize in the galloping competition for Horse Artillery was won by the newly-formed Y Battery R.H.A., commanded at present by Lieut. and Rdgmr. Parr, who has been chiefly instrumental in raising the battery. The second prize was won by S Battery R.H.A. The Hon. Mrs. Trotter distributed the prizes at the evening performance.

Major-Gen. Trotter and his courteous staff may well be satisfied with the result of the Tournament, for on all sides we hear their exertions spoken of in terms of enthusiasm. From first to last not a hitch occurred, and those who went to Salington to witness the several displays have been more than satisfied. Actual figures are not yet to hand to enable the executive to say what the financial results have been. The receipts have been less than those of last year, but the expenditure also has been very considerably less than usual, partly because the management has been economical and partly because all the officers have so thrown themselves into their duties that they may be said to have worked double tides. The result is that, while the prices of some seats have been reduced and less money than usual has been received from the public, the amount available for the military charities will, in all probability, be greater than it was last year. At least, it is hoped so. In no previous year have the officials been more enthusiastic than they have been this. All have striven to make the tournament go, and it certainly will not be the fault of the staff if the Service charities fail to benefit to the extent of previous years.

HOW OUR SOLDIERS CAN WEATHER THE SOUTH AFRICAN CLIMATE.—When H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES visited India, he was equipped, by orders of the Physicians, with HOFF'S MALT EXTRACT. This is the beverage which staid the body against the climate, maintains the appetite, and being palatable, acts refreshing. The AUSTRIAN Military Field Hospitals reported officially that this preparation is greatly beneficial to the recovery of the wounded soldiers. In emaciation, loss of succulence of the digestive organs, and catarrh, it proved very valuable. This report is issued by VON GAYERSFELD, Major and War Commissary, Pirtz. Caution—The name M. HOFF, HAMBURG, must be on all labels. M. HOFF'S London House, 29, NEW BRIDGE STREET, E.C.

Obituary.

ARMY.

Lieut.-Gen. Sir Frederick Marshall, K.C.M.G., Colonel of the 1st (Royal) Dragoons, died yesterday afternoon at four o'clock after a lingering illness. Born July 26, 1829, he joined the Army as Cornet in the 10th Hussars Sept. 16, 1849; became Lieutenant Sept. 16, 1851; exchanged to the 1st Dragoon Guards Oct. 14, 1851; and to the 2nd Life Guards March 2, 1855. He obtained his troop Feb. 4, 1859; became Major and Brevet-Lieutenant-Colonel March 6, 1863; Lieutenant-Colonel March 6, 1864; Colonel March 6, 1868; and vacating his regimental command March 26, 1873, in order to join the Staff of the Duke of Cambridge as A.D.C. at headquarters, filled that position until Dec. 1, 1877, when he was disqualified by promotion to Major-General. He served in the Crimean campaign 1854-55, including the siege of Sebastopol (medal with clasp and Turkish medal), and commanded a Cavalry Brigade in the Zulu war 1879, mentioned in despatches (medal with clasp and C.M.G.). He was placed on the retired list Sept. 5, 1884, and was appointed Colonel of the Royal Dragoons March 29, 1890.

Major-Gen. Thomas Lloyd Still, Colonel, retired list Royal Artillery, died at 69, Margaret Street, Cavendish Square, W., on the 7th inst. He joined the Royal Artillery as 2nd Lieutenant Dec. 22, 1852; became Lieutenant Feb. 17, 1854; Captain March 12, 1860; Major July 5, 1872; Lieutenant-Colonel Nov. 24, 1877; Colonel Nov. 24, 1881; and retired with the hon. rank of Major-General Nov. 24, 1882. He served in the Crimean campaign from July, 1855, including the siege and fall of Sebastopol (medal with clasp and Turkish medal).

Col. Edward Vicars Boyle, Lieutenant-Colonel, retired list, Royal Artillery, died at 91, Belgrave Road on the 4th inst., of pneumonia, aged 59. He joined the Royal Artillery Oct. 18, 1856; became Captain Feb. 2, 1868; Major April 1, 1877; Lieutenant-Colonel April 1, 1884; and Colonel April 1, 1888. He had passed the Staff College, but had not seen any war service.

Col. William Keough, retired list, late of the Suffolk Regiment, died at his residence, Ardely House, Oxford Gardens, W., on the 6th inst. He joined the Army June 6, 1855; became Lieutenant Oct. 2, 1858; Captain July 29, 1865; Major Oct. 1, 1877; Lieutenant-Colonel July 14, 1883; and Colonel July 14, 1887.

Col. the Duke of Wellington, Colonel 3rd Batn. Duke of Wellington's West Riding Regt., and late of Grenadier Guards, died at Strathfieldsaye yesterday morning. His Grace, who had been in indifferent health for a considerable period, was present at the Levée held by the Prince of Wales on behalf of her Majesty on Monday, May 28. Henry Wellesley, third Duke of Wellington, was born in 1846, and succeeded to the title in 1884. He was educated at Eton, and joining the Grenadier Guards March 16, 1865, became Lieutenant and Captain Aug. 1, 1868; Captain and Lieut.-Colonel April 1, 1876; and retired by sale of his commission in 1880. He was appointed hon. Colonel of the 3rd Batn. Duke of Wellington's West Riding Regt., April 10, 1886. From 1874-80 he represented Andover in the Conservative interest, and was defeated there in 1868 and 1880. He married in 1882 Evelyn Katrine Gwenfara, daughter of the late Col. T. Peers Williams, M.P. His brother, Col. Lord Arthur Charles Wellesley, half-pay, late Grenadier Guards, who was raised to the rank of a Duke's son in 1884, succeeds to the title.

Col. John Rogers, C.B., A.S.C., Director of Supplies Egyptian Army, died at Cairo on the 31st ult. Born Sept. 9, 1855, he received his commission in the Control Department, April 1, 1875; becoming Captain in the Army Service Corps Dec. 11, 1878; Major, Oct. 28, 1889; Lieutenant-Colonel, Oct. 28, 1894; and Colonel, Nov. 16, 1898. Since November, 1888, he has been employed with the Egyptian Army. He served in the Egyptian war of 1882 (medal and Khedive's star), and again with Sir Gerald Graham's Soudan expedition in 1884, being present at the engagements of El Teb and Tamai (two clasps). In 1896 he served with the Dongola Expeditionary Force under Sir Herbert Kitchener as Director of Supplies, including the engagement at Firket and the operations at Hafir (mentioned in despatches, and C.B.; Khedive's medal with two clasps; Queen's medal and brevet of Colonel). For his services with the Egyptian Army he received the 3rd Class of the Medjidie.

Col. Robert Wallace, retired list, Madras Army, died on the 26th ult., aged 84. He was a son of the late Col. R. E. Wallace, K.H., King's Dragoon Guards.

Col. William Alexander Spence, Duke of Edinburgh's Own Volunteer Rifles, was killed in the engagement at Faberspruit on May 29. He was the son of the late Capt. S. Spence, 28th Regiment. He served for some time in the 77th Regiment, and had commanded the Duke of Edinburgh's Own Volunteer Rifles in Cape Colony for ten years.

Major Charles Logan Crutchley, Captain, Leinster Regiment, second in command of the 1st Batn. West African Regiment, died at Ilorin, Nigeria, West Africa, on March 27. Born May 29, 1861, the eldest son of the late Col. R. L. Crutchley, I.S.C., he joined the 6th Dragoon Guards from the Militia Jan. 27, 1883; was promoted to a Lieutenancy in the Leinster Regiment June 8, 1887; became Captain Nov. 23, 1892; was Adjutant of Militia Sept. 1, 1896, to March 10, 1898; and joined the West African Frontier Force March 19, 1898.

Capt. John Wreford Julian Hardman, 1st (Royal) Dragoons, died at Pinetown Bridge Hospital, Natal, on the 30th ult. Born Jan. 10, 1863, he joined the Inniskilling Dragoons, Aug. 29, 1885; was transferred to the Royal Dragoons, Oct. 7, 1885; became Captain Aug. 31, 1893; was Adjutant 1894-98; and Staff Officer for Recruiting, London, May to October, 1899.

Capt. Frederick Sutton, late of the 11th Hussars, died at 15, Clarence Parade, Southsea, on the 2nd inst.

Capt. Arthur Henry Uthoff Tindal, 1st Batn. Welsh Regiment, died of wounds at Kheis on the 29th ult. Born March 5, 1858, he joined the Army as 2nd Lieutenant Jan. 30, 1878; became Lieutenant Feb. 2, 1881; Captain Oct. 7, 1887; was Adjutant 1888-92; Adjutant 3rd (Militia) Batn. 1892-97. He was employed in West Africa as second in command of the West African Regiment at Lagos from 1898 until he went to South Africa.

Capt. Stewart Robertson, 3rd Batn. Black Watch, died at Kroonstad, South Africa, on the 1st inst. of enteric fever, aged 35. He joined the 14th Hussars as Lieutenant Aug. 29, 1885; became Captain Dec. 18, 1889; and afterwards retiring from the Army; was appointed to 3rd Batn. Black Watch as Captain July 13, 1898, and was seconded recently for active service.

Capt. Clive Skene Keith, 13th Batn. Imperial Yeomanry, was killed in action between Kroonstad and Lindley on the 29th ult. Born May 20, 1863, he joined the South Staffordshire Regiment from the Militia May 14, 1884, and was transferred at once to the 3rd Dragoon Guards, becoming Captain July 4, 1892. He was attached to the Army Ordnance Department from 1891 to 1896, and afterwards retired on a gratuity. On the formation of the Imperial Yeomanry he at once applied for and obtained an appointment.

Lieut. Laurence Oliver Falaise Mellish, 2nd Batn. Wiltshire Regt., died at Bloemfontein on the 2nd inst., of enteric fever. Born Jan. 21, 1876, he joined the Wiltshire Regiment as 2nd Lieutenant from the Militia May 15, 1896, and became Lieutenant July 9, 1898.

Lieut. George Harold Matthews, 2nd Batn. Gloucestershire Regiment, died on the 29th ult. of wounds received in action at Khels the previous day. Born May 12, 1878, the son of T. G. Matthews, J.P., Newport Towers, Berkeley, Gloucestershire, he joined the Gloucestershire Regiment as 2nd Lieutenant from the Militia March 16, 1898, and became Lieutenant Feb. 24 last.

Lieut. Cyril German Danks, 3rd Batn. Manchester Regiment, died at the Cambridge Hospital, Aldershot, on the 31st ult., from the effects of a wound received in the battle of Elands Laagte. Born Sept. 11, 1875, the only son of the Rev. G. W. Danks, Vicar of Morton, Gainsborough, he joined the Army as 2nd Lieutenant in the Manchester Regiment, May 15, 1897, and became Lieutenant April 13, 1898. He was serving with his battalion in Natal when the war broke out, and was wounded in his first action.

2nd Lieut. Alastair Heneage Murray, 2nd Batn. Grenadier Guards, died on the 1st inst. of wounds received in action at Senekal on the 29th ult. Born April 24, 1878, the eldest son of Mr. C. T. Murray, M.P. for Coventry, and Lady Anne Murray, he joined the Grenadier Guards from the 3rd Batn. Seaforth Highlanders on Nov. 15 last.

2nd Lieut. Francis Spencer Firth, 2nd Batn. the Buffs, died at Bloemfontein on the 1st inst. of enteric fever. He joined the Army Aug. 12, 1899.

2nd Lieut. William Henry Amedroz, 3rd Batn. South Wales Borderers, died at Boshof on the 25th ult., of enteric fever. He was appointed to a commission Jan. 17 last, and at once proceeded with his battalion on active service.

ARMY COMMISSIONS.

The Vice-Chancellor of Oxford University has recommended the following gentlemen to the War Office for commissions in the Army, as under:—

In the Cavalry:—F. H. Charlton, B.A., H. H. Sandbach, Christ Church; the Hon. Anthony M. Henley, B.A., H. J. de Trafford, Balliol; J. M. Hamilton, B.A., Trinity; C. Nelson, Merton; S. L. Holland, Marcon's Hall; A. B. Reynolds, New Coll.; G. N. Reynolds, Oriel.

In the Artillery:—H. M. Greaves, B.A., Keble; H. G. de Watteville, B.A., Christ Church; E. L. Caldecott, B.A., Oriel; E. Crawshaw-Williams, Trinity; C. P. Rowley, Magdalen; R. H. D. Thompson, Merton; H. W. Blathwayt, Corpus Christi; W. L. C. Kirby, Queen's; K. B. Ferguson, Wadham.

In the Infantry:—J. C. Farmer, B.A., D. Fitzmaurice, B.A., F. H. Humphrys, C. C. H. Twiss, Christ Church; H. W. Green, B.A., Exeter Coll.; G. U. Robins, Magdalen; K. H. Bruce, Trinity Coll.; G. H. S. Steer, Wadham; A. Beavan, Keble; R. J. P. D. Aldridge, B.A., Worcester; H. S. Rogers, Queen's. Edmund G. S. L'Estrange Malone, of Oriel, has been previously recommended for a commission in the infantry in place of another gentleman who has resigned.

In the Army Service Corps:—W. O. Marks, B.A., Queen's; L. M. S. Page, Wadham.

THE Queen has commanded that her Majesty's Reserve Regiments of Cavalry and Royal Reserve Regiments of Infantry shall take precedence—the Cavalry after the regiments of Cavalry of the Line, the Guards after the regiments of Foot Guards, and the Infantry after the territorial regiments. The Reserve Regiments will take precedence among themselves according to the sequence in which they appear in Army Orders 77 and 78 of this year.

In a recent issue in referring to Messrs. Alfred Webb Miles and Co., of Brook Street, Grosvenor Square, not being regimental tailors in spite of having a large military clientele, we regret that the name of the firm was incorrectly printed.

A FEW old soldiers in Hunslet, Leeds, are raising a fund to place a stained glass window in St. Jude's Parish Church, as a memorial to their gallant comrades who have fought in South Africa.

It is notified that no applications from ex-soldiers for enlistment in the Royal Reserve Regiments will be entertained in future, and that no further enlistments for those regiments will be sanctioned after the 18th inst.

CAVALRY.

2nd Life Guards.—Lieut.-Col. Neeld arrived in England on Tuesday in the Canada in command of invalids from South Africa.

1st (King's) Dragoon Guards. strength 14 officers, 842 men, and 499 horses, have arrived at Aldershot from Dublin. Headquarters marched in on Thursday. The regiment has taken over the East Cavalry Barracks.

3rd Dragoon Guards.—Major Sir Arthur Lushington has been selected for special service in South Africa with the forces under Sir F. Carrington.

3rd Hussars.—Major Goring has passed the examination qualifying for the rank of Lieut.-Colonel.

6th (Inniskilling) Dragoons.—Capt. Grey, late of the regiment, serving with Sir F. Carrington's force, has been appointed to the command of a brigade of mounted infantry.

7th Hussars.—Major Carew, D.S.O., on special service with Sir F. Carrington, has been appointed a brigadier-general to command the 1st Brigade of the Rhodesian Field Force, consisting of the 1st and 2nd Bushman's Regiments, under Col. Airey, New South Wales, and Major Tunbridge, Queensland.

10th Hussars.—Capt. Lord Southampton, late of the regiment, has been appointed to the Reserve Reserve of Hussars, in place of Capt. the Hon. H. T. Allsopp.

15th Hussars.—Major Peyton, D.S.O., before leaving India for South Africa on special service, passed the prescribed test qualifying for the rank of Lieut.-Colonel.

17th Lancers.—Capt. Noel, retired list, has joined the Reserve Squadron for duty.

18th Hussars.—Major Marling, V.C., who has been invalided home from South Africa, arrived at Stroud on Wednesday evening, accompanied by his wife, who was also through the siege of Ladysmith. Congratulatory addresses from the Urban Council and the Conservative Club leaders were presented before a large gathering, and the carriage conveying the major and his wife was drawn by residents to Stanley Park, the residence of Sir William Marling, Major Marling's father.

20th Hussars.—Lieut.-Col. Beauchamp has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on medical certificate. Major Witham has passed the examination qualifying for the rank of Lieut.-Colonel. Capt. Jacob, whose four years as Adjutant will expire on the 21st inst., has been granted an extension for six months. Lieut. Woolcombe is a candidate for the Indian Staff Corps, and has joined the 2nd Bombay Lancers.

21st Lancers replace the King's Dragoon Guards at Dublin. Two squadrons have marched in this week from Newbridge and taken over Marlborough Barracks.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

A memorial service to the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the regiment who have lost their lives in the South African Campaign either on the battlefield or through disease was held on Thursday in St. George's Garrison Church, Woolwich. The congregation included a large number of officers and Artillerymen of the garrison, besides civilian relatives and friends of the dead soldiers, most of those in the church wearing mourning. The Duke of Cambridge, as Colonel-in-Chief, was represented by Major-Gen. Sir J. F. Maurice (commanding the district), and among others present were Cols. Corbett, Yates, de Jersey, Jocelyn, Lady Maurice, the Rev. E. Escreet, rector of Woolwich, the Dowager Countess of Kingston, Mrs. Cooper, Mrs. Francis Cooper, Mrs. Barrington-Foot. The service, which in the circumstances was extremely impressive, was conducted by the senior chaplain, the Rev. Reginald Moseley. It opened with Chopin's "Funeral March," played by the fine string band of the Royal Artillery, who gave to the solemn music its full effectiveness under the skilled direction of Lieut. the Cavalière Zavertal. The chaplain then read the long list of officers and men who had fallen in the war, the sad but glorious roll numbering 390, and added: "I am sure we all hope to-day that God has had mercy upon them." After the congregation had sung the hymn "Now the labourer's task is o'er," the opening sentences of the burial service were recited by the chaplain, and the choir chanted the 90th Psalm. The Lesson, which was the noble passage from 1 Corinthians xv., commencing "But now is Christ risen from the dead," was read by Col. Barrington-Foot. The anthem was Spohr's setting of "Blest are the departed." Prayers followed for "all those who had fallen in the war," and after the hymn "Peace, perfect peace" was sung, prayers were offered up for "all those who, owing to this war, are desolate and lonely, sorrowing and bereaved." The band then played Sullivan's "In Memoriam" Overture, which was followed by the hymn "On the Resurrection morning," and the service concluded with the Benediction.

Improvements in the equipment of the Royal Horse and Field Batteries in India are to be carried out forthwith. As regards the Horse Artillery guns, sufficient for three batteries have been indented for. These will be Mark III. wire guns, 12-prs. of the latest pattern, with a light carriage, and all the recently-improved equipment. In the matter of field artillery the guns will have the spade attachment, and also Grenfell sights, while the breech mechanism will be improved, so that only one motion will be required in locking the breech. These changes will admit of laying and loading being done simultaneously. The tray system of ammunition supply will also be introduced.

The 27th and 54th Batteries, R.F.A., at Mhow and Meerut are being rearmed with 30-pr. guns.

One of the field batteries at Meerut is in future to be stationed at Campbellpore, which will thus become a two-battery station. This change has much to recommend it.

In the annual competition for prizes among the Garrison Artillery in India practising with 40-pr. muzzle-loading guns, No. 5 Co., Western Division, Dhagal, commanded by Capt. F. Vans Agnew, won the first prize with 233 points; and No. 1 Co., Eastern Division, commanded by Major Tawney, Allahabad, the second prize, with 219 points. No. 33 Co., Southern Division, Attock, comes third with 213 points. Among batteries of Heavy Artillery practising with a similar gun, No. 7 Co., Western Division, Palipahari, commanded by Major Thackeray, has won the prize with 546 points.

Lieut.-Col. J. M. S. Brunker, from command of the Field Artillery, Campbellpore, has been appointed to the command of the R.H.A. at Secunderabad, vice Col. J. Leach, who has proceeded to England on being placed on half pay.

Lieut.-Col. A. Keene, D.S.O., R.G.A., has been appointed to the command of the R.A. at Quetta.

Lieut.-Col. S. D. Rainsford, R.F.A., has been appointed to the command of the Artillery at Jhansi, and Lieut.-Col. A. H. Browne, R.G.A. at Allahabad.

Some 100 non-commissioned officers have been called for from India to join the new Royal Horse and Field batteries under formation. They are to proceed home as early as possible.

Major A. H. Carter, and A. L. Hibbert, R.F.A., have passed in India an examination qualifying for the rank of Lieut.-Colonel.

INFANTRY.

Bufs (3rd).—Princess Louise, Duchess of Argyll, will visit Canterbury on Tuesday next to unveil the memorial in the Cathedral to those who lost their lives in the North-West Frontier operations of 1897-98. Her Royal Highness will arrive in the city at about 3.40 p.m., and drive to the Deanery. Proceeding thence to the Cathedral, the ceremony will take place. There will be no civic reception on account of the Princess's mourning. The Mayor and Corporation will, however, be present at the unveiling, and Lord Wolseley will attend. Capt. Pearson, 1st Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for twelve months on private affairs.

Royal Warwickshire Regiment (6th).—Capt. Elkington left England on Wednesday in the Aurania for South Africa. Capt. Skipwith and 2nd Lieuts. Hore and Morritt, 2nd Batn., left the Royal Albert Docks on Thursday in the Lake Erie for the Cape.

Royal Fusiliers (7th).—Major Bird, Staff Captain at Cairo, took up the duties of D.A.A.G. on the departure of Major Rycroft, 11th Hussars, for South Africa. Capt. Thurburn, 2nd Batn., of Kildington Hall, Woodstock, Oxford, who died in action at Hlangwane Hill, near Colenso, on Feb. 19, aged 29 years, son of Mr. Charles Thurburn, of Woodstock, left estate valued at £34,670 11s. 3d. gross, including personality of the net value of £34,644 15s. 3d. The executors are his brother, Capt. Thurburn, Royal Scots Fusiliers, and Mr. George Levinge Whately, of 17, Lincoln's-inn-Fields, solicitor. The testator left all of his property to his said brother absolutely.

King's Regiment (8th).—The 2nd Batn. proceeds to-day from Dublin to the Musketry Camp, Kildrillo.

Lincolnshire Regiment (10th).—Major Ivatt, 1st Batn., has passed the examination qualifying for the rank of Lieut.-Colonel.

King's Royal Rifles (60th).—Capt. the Hon. St. L. Jervis left England on Wednesday in the Aurania for South Africa.

Gloucestershire Regiment (61st).—Major Tufnell and Capt. Tulloh, doing duty at the depot, Bristol, proceed to South Africa to join the service companies. Two young and very promising officers are reported as having died in South Africa: 2nd Lieut. Noel only joined recently; he succumbed to fever at Bloemfontein. Lieut. Matthews, of the Mounted Infantry Company, died from wounds received at Kheis May 23. Both officers were natives of Gloucestershire. Harold Matthews was a good cricketer and well known as a very straight cross-country rider in the Berkeley Hunt.

Wiltshire Regiment (62nd).—2nd Lieut. Black-Hawkins, 3rd Batn., is acting as A.D.C. to Brig.-Gen. Cutbill, commanding at Kilworth Camp.

North Staffordshire Regiment (64th).—Major Hawtayne has passed the examination qualifying for the rank of Lieut.-Colonel.

Royal Berkshire Regiment (66th).—Major Faunce and Capt. Southey, from the depot at Reading, left Southampton on Wednesday in the Aurania to join headquarters at the Cape.

Highland Light Infantry (74th).—Capt. Feilden is acting as A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Murray, commanding the 1st Infantry Brigade at Aldershot. Lieut. Bridge has taken up the duties of Adjutant of the Mounted Infantry under training at Aldershot.

Seaforth Highlanders (78th).—Lieut. Hall left England on Thursday in the Lake Erie for South Africa to join headquarters.

York and Lancaster Regiment (84th).—Major Howe has passed the examination qualifying for the rank of Lieut.-Colonel.

Royal Munster Fusiliers (101st).—Capt. Lane, retired list, has joined the depot at Tralee for duty.

Royal Dublin Fusiliers (102nd).—Major Gordon left England in the Aurania on Wednesday for South Africa.

Rifle Brigade.—Lieut. Power, 3rd Batn., succeeds to the baronetcy by the death of his brother, Sir John Elliott Power, fourth baronet, on active service with the Imperial Yeomanry in South Africa.

West India Regiment.—Capt. Carleton and Lieut. Willis have been selected for special service on the Gold Coast.

WITH reference to the extended musketry training of Volunteers in camp ordered for the present year, it has been decided that, where local circumstances cause such pressure that not more than two days can be allotted for the special practices, brigadiers may approve of 32 instead of 28 rounds being fired in one day.

ALDERSHOT employers have set an example of patriotism. The Lord-Lieutenant of Hampshire is very anxious that the local Volunteer battalion should muster in strength for the month's training this year, and issued a circular asking employers to give the movement their support. At Aldershot all the men of the local company of the 3rd V.B. Hampshire Regiment but two have signified their intention of remaining under training for the full 28 days, showing that the Lord-Lieutenant's appeal has not been without its effect.

Reviews.

THE MAGAZINES.

South Africa and the things that have taken place there hold a considerable position in the Nineteenth Century, and two writers open the number with a discussion of the future. Mr. F. S. Tatham, of the Natal Legislative Assembly, is heart and soul for the annexation of the Republics, but urges that South Africa must enjoy the fullest powers of self-government consistent with the Imperial idea, and says that the Briton and the Boer together will work shoulder to shoulder in defence of what will be regarded as a common heritage. The other writer is the Rev. J. S. Moffat, who regards the black man as a future fellow-citizen and a source of strength to the commonwealth. But certainly the most interesting article in the number is on "The Cavalry Rush to Kimberley and in Pursuit of Cronje," to which a melancholy interest attaches, because it is from the pen of Capt. Cecil Boyle, of the Imperial Yeomanry, who, after serving as gallant on Gen. French's staff, was killed at the head of his men near Boshof. The lamented officer's article gives a stirring account of the brilliant ride, which gains a great deal from the manner in which it is described. It was hard work, and Capt. Boyle remarks that what surprised everybody was the fat and sleek appearance of the horses and inhabitants of Kimberley as compared with the relievers. Gen. French bade his staff "good night," and told them they might sleep well, but immediately came the telegram from Lord Kitchener telling of Cronje's retreat, and at 4.15 a.m. they were in the saddle again. The story of Cronje's resistance has now been told many times, but never, perhaps, with quite the force given to it by Capt. Boyle. Mr. Laurence W. Pike urges his plea for wounded war horses, and advocates the reorganisation of the Army Veterinary Department on the lines of other departments of the Army, the extension of the Geneva Convention to those who care for wounded animals, and the destroying of all badly wounded animals without avoidable delay. "Enigmas of Empire" are discussed by Mr. Sidney Low in relation to Imperial Government, and Col. J. H. Rivett-Carnac describes the excellent system of Swiss Rifle Clubs, while Capt. Fitzalan Manners contributes a kind of historical gossip concerning the Irish Guards. We have by no means exhausted the interests of the Nineteenth Century.

Blackwood also is abundantly interesting, and has throughout a pleasant literary flavour. There is a charming sketch of the departure of a 2nd lieutenant for the front "by his sister," and Christian Burke contributes a heart-felt poem upon "The Faithful City"—Mafeking—from which it would have been a pleasure to quote. "Floreat Britannia," by Sir Theodore Martin, in relation to the same subject, is a well written sonnet. There is also a capital ballad of "Foul-Weather Jack"—Admiral Byron—by M. C. Gillington. Admiral Kennedy's "Hurrah for the Life of a Sailor!" is the subject of an extremely pleasant article, which is wholly sound in its right appreciation of sea power. An article "Concerning our Cavalry" has much to say about its neglected condition, and Major-Gen. F. S. Russell discusses the reasons for "Surprises in War." These, however, are articles to which we may allude elsewhere. The operations in South Africa are discussed by the trenchant military contributor, who felt a cold shudder at the glorification of the late Col. de Villebois Mareuil and at the shaking of Cronje's hand by Lord Roberts. Very high praise is given to Lord Kitchener for the manner in which, without fear or favour, he cut down the military transport, greatly economising the number of waggons. There is hearty appreciation for Lord Roberts's success, and for the manner in which in his rapid advance blow succeeded blow.

In the United Service Magazine Lieut.-Col. F. N. Maude continues his interesting notes on the "Evolution of Cavalry." An excellent descriptive article is upon fighting at Ladysmith with the relief force. "Common-Sense" urges with some force the reorganisation of the corps of Royal Engineers, proposing to divide it into two parts—one for Imperial service and one for Indian service, entirely distinct, with the addition of a non-combatant Works Department, and some other changes. The notes on the war in South Africa are continued, but are far too brief. Capt. Byford Mair, R.E., gives the Japanese "Man in the Street's" views concerning Korea, which embody a strong determination that the independence of the Flowery Land shall be preserved at all costs. The naval articles are upon Naval Training, by Capt. Eardley-Wilmot, who stoutly opposes the views of the "Masts and Sails School," and upon Sir Edward Boscawen in the series of our naval heroes.

It is not too late to allude to the Journal of the Royal United Service Institution, for May which has just reached us. Its most important paper is the second prize essay on the best types of war vessels, by Commander Harry Jones, R.N., who takes the very just view that the total force of every war vessel is directly dependent upon her displacement, and that the proper relative value to be attached to the three fighting qualities—offensive, defensive, and motive—is the highly important question, and that these qualities cannot be embodied in inadequate degree in vessels of one type.

We have also received the National Review; Macmillan's Magazine, in which Mr. David Hannay has a useful article upon the French Army, while Mr. W. J. Fletcher annihilates the "Boarding Myth," showing that the British sailor never boarded while other means were open to him; the Cornhill, with an article apparently arguing that many officers do not regard the Army as a serious profession; and Longman's Magazine, the Antiquary, and the Genealogical Magazine—all good. We have also upon our table a number of illustrated magazines. The Pall Mall Magazine is a good number, in which Mr. G. W. Forrest describes Delhi, having fortunately had Lord Roberts as his cicerone, and with an article defending the War Office. The Badminton Magazine is capital, and the American magazines are truly wonderful—the Century particularly so from having a fantastic article by Nikola Tesla, the famous electrician, on "The Problem of Increasing Human Energy." M. Tesla has come to the conclusion that universal peace is impossible, and foresees the advent of practical aerial navigation with Great Britain or America as the great "Air Power." He appears to think that fighting at sea, and perhaps on land, will ultimately be carried on by his "telautomons," being mechanical devices acting as if they were human, and operating with "borrowed minds" actuated from a distance.

Cairo and Egypt by Hallil J. Kemeid (Simpkin and Co.), is the third edition of a pictorial and descriptive guide. Association Football, by N. L. Jackson (George Newnes), should be welcome after the close of the football season, being a volume by a well-known player, dealing descriptively and practically with a game with which the author has had infinite acquaintance for the last five-and-twenty years, enabling him to write a very interesting volume. Racing, by W. A. C. Blew, M.A. (Everett and Co.), is a gossip volume dealing with famous horse owners, trainers, and jockeys, bookmakers, et hoc genus omne.

The City Press has issued a capital set of six various pictorial postcards, illustrating the work and achievements of the C.I.V. in South Africa. The form is charming and artistic, and the cards should be widely popular.

Messrs. W. and A. K. Johnston have produced an excellent war map of the Orange River State, as the Free State is to be named now that it has become part of the British Empire. It is executed with the care which marks all the work of this eminent firm.

THE "BELLEISLE" EXPERIMENT.

IF the Admiralty really believed that they could keep secret what happened on board the Belleisle they must have realised by this time their mistake. A mistake it was, anyway, to try and keep the people of this country from learning the facts, and this has been fully proved by the result. In the first place, as we pointed out last week, it has been necessary for the Admiralty to contradict that which on the evidence of their own eyes the newspaper correspondents told the public they saw. By a very simple arrangement this blunder might have been prevented, while as it is there still exists a notion that the Admiralty are trying to hide something of which they are ashamed. However, this week photographs of the ship have been published, and in the Times a capital account of a visit to her appeared. From these sources, and others of a more private character, we have already been able to learn a great deal, and there can be scarcely any doubt that as time goes on, and investigations are closer, much more that is valuable in the way of information will transpire. The business of preparing the ship for docking, plugging the shot holes, and otherwise making her watertight, must have been difficult, and appears to have been performed with conspicuous success. Not only had the wounds to be covered, but the framework of the ship had been so much shaken that there could have been very little of her hull that was not leaky. However, she was safely towed into harbour and docked without mishap. Of the twelve shots which were fired from the 12-in. guns, the passage of about half can be traced in the ship, and it is assumed that the others may have passed over the vessel, as for a long time the smoke prevented the gunners from seeing their target. Of the six shots only one entered the main battery, through a clean cut hole, and bursting must have done great damage to life had the guns' crews been present. Another shot struck the after end of the main battery and knocked the roof off the conning tower. Two shells struck abaft the citadel and one before it, wrecking everything in their way, even so heavy an object as the capstan being dismounted. The last of the half dozen 12-in. projectiles, and the most important of all, pierced the hull amidships, and two feet below the water-line, damaging engines and steam pipes, and was the cause, in all probability, of the sinking of the ship. This was the only shot that struck below the water-line and perforated. The number of 6-in. projectiles fired at the ship was 192, and of these a large proportion exploded outside the citadel, the vessel's side being described as "plastered" with their remains. Not only did the 9-in. Krupp plates, but the iron armour of the ship amidships, which may be reckoned as about equal to 5.7-in. hardened steel, keep out the 6-in. shell. This is a result of great importance, both as regards the value we may put upon our own guns and ships, and its effect in contemplating the attack of an enemy. It would appear to be necessary, as a special correspondent of the Times points out, to supply ourselves with armour-piercing projectiles for 6-in. guns, unless we propose to rely for annihilation upon the heaviest guns, a course which has not been considered the most advantageous.

Although, however, the really vital damage was done by two or three 12-in. shell, it must not be supposed that the small projectiles failed to play a useful part. In the unarmoured part of the ship everything was cut to pieces by the fragments of small shell exploding in every direction. The masts of the ship stood, although struck in several places, but the funnel, boats, ventilators, and other articles collapsed or were smashed into splinters. In this connection it is noteworthy that portions of the metal and rivets appear to have been most dangerous in their action about the upper deck especially, and it suggests itself whether a substitute for wood in the shape of corrugated iron doors or shutters would not have made most diabolical langridge. With regard to the fact that the ship was not set on fire, although the decks were blown up, it would be interesting to know if any unburnt powder fell on board the Belleisle, for it will be remembered that it was stated after Santiago that the conflagration was principally caused by half-burned pellets of powder lodging in the wooden bulkheads. At present we have little light thrown upon the action of lyddite as a bursting charge. Whether lyddite was used in the 12-in. shells at all appears to be unsettled? But lyddite was certainly used in several of the 6-in. shells which burst outside the iron skin. These shells, although they did not penetrate, performed a certain amount of useful work, some of them so hammering the armour-plates as to cause these to separate from the main structure of the ship, thus developing considerable leakage. In other cases where the shells burst somewhat above the water line the lighter guns placed high on the bulwarks were damaged by the explosion. A similar result, it will be remembered, was observed in some previous experiments, when it was proposed to alter the location of the minor armaments in certain ships. It is obvious that either these small guns could not be fought at all, or that if they are to be they should be better protected than they are at present. It is important to notice that after the first few shots had been fired it became most difficult for those on board the Majestic to see the target. At the same time it must be remembered that the Belleisle was not moving at all, and that it was necessary in the circumstances to conduct the bombardment on certain pre-arranged lines, in drawing up which the direction of the wind could not have been foretold. Neither this nor the manner in which the experiment was conducted quite entitles "Onlooker" to describe it as unscientific. While we must agree that a series of trials, such as "Onlooker" describes, would in all probability have added to the value of the experiments, it will not do to forget what was the primary reason for the destruction of the ship. If she had been fired at in the way that he prescribes, there might have been no satisfactory solution of the fire problem, and it was necessary to subject her to a simultaneous hail from a mixed armament in order to obtain a definite reply to this question. On the whole, therefore, we are inclined to regard the expenditure as well laid out, especially as we see no reason why there should not be further trials as soon as the ship has been sufficiently repaired.

THE "NAVAL ANNUAL."

IT was, perhaps, inevitable that the war in South Africa should have its effect upon the "Naval Annual." Captain Brassey, who has so ably edited the volume during recent years, is in command of a company of Imperial Yeomanry in South Africa, and the editorship of the new volume has rested in the hands of Mr. John Leyland. The "Naval Annual" is so well known to our readers, and has such a world-wide fame in all naval circles, that it is unnecessary for us to deal with the new volume at any length. We could give it no higher praise than by saying that the editor of this year has maintained unimpaired the character and the traditions of the book. It is a complete record of naval affairs, combined with an appreciation of present conditions. Next year, presumably, it will give us a complete record of the work done by the Navy in South Africa. In the present volume the war is chiefly reflected in a note on the naval guns, added to Captain Orde Browne's chapter upon ordnance, and in a chapter, mainly historical, by Mr. David Hannay upon Naval Brigades. Mr. Thursfield gives an admirable account of the Naval Manœuvres, equal to any he has contributed to the volumes of previous years, and he writes with a judicious and impartial mind. Once more Mr. Dunell treats the important subject of marine engineering, and we note in his chapter some feeling, not against the water-tube boilers, but against the Belleville type. Those parts of the Annual which deal with the British and Foreign Navies are a little fuller than before, and Mr. F. K. Barnes, who has been associated with the Annual from its very beginning, is to be congratulated on the ship diagrams, which are more numerous than last year. We are very glad to see that Captain Orde Browne has found occasion in his exhaustive section dealing with armour and ordnance, to reply to the strictures upon our guns, of M. Claudinon in the French Chamber. He is insistent on the corrosive effects of cordite. One particularly excellent chapter is by Commander R. H. S. Bacon on "The Tactics of Fast Craft," which we commend to all naval officers.

Our special object in alluding to the "Naval Annual" to-day is to draw attention to its very important chapter upon "The Recent Discussion on Naval Training." This is by an anonymous writer, but one whose discernment and professional competence are revealed in every line he has written. The views put forward will not command universal sanction, but it is most useful to have the ideas of the "Masts and Sail School" put so lucidly. The writer is generally in agreement with Sir Gerard Noel, whose views were expressed in the United Service Magazine for April, and are traversed in the current number by Captain Eardley-Wilmot, and in the National Review by Rear-Admiral Fitzgerald. These writers hold the view that to revive and maintain the old system of training is impossible and unnecessary, and Captain Eardley-Wilmot thinks that something like efficient substitutes are found in the shipping of coal, handling boats and anchors, rigging derricks, wire-rope splicing, and torpedo defence, and finally says that every officer should be an engineer. This is not at all the view put forward by the writer of the "Naval Annual." He begins by asking, "What is the object of training?" and finds the necessary elements to be developed in courage, readiness of resource, skill in using weapons on actual service, fortitude in difficulties, and in the qualities lately described by the Times in a leading article—self-reliance and resource, quickness of eye and steadiness of nerve, calmness and self-possession in energy, steadfastness in danger, helpfulness in difficulties, and a quick sense of comradeship.

The general argument in the "Naval Annual" is that it is not a sufficient reason for abolishing a certain class of training that the instruments of it will not be used in action, and that, to be rigorously logical, gymnastics and physical drill, and everything not concerned in the handling of the latest naval material should be abandoned. Fighting efficiency is not derived merely from drill, and the writer looks upon events in South Africa as a striking demonstration of the inability of greatly superior excellence in mere drill, even when allied with a spirit of extraordinary courage and rare devotion, to ensure success. The argument is not against drill, but against its inadequacy to produce the necessary qualities which are to be sought in the result produced on the personnel far more than in the incidental knowledge acquired in any method of training. In other words, the writer of the "Naval Annual" is not content simply with making the trained men familiar with the use of the modern appliances of war. He concludes by contending that the advocates of the new system have brought forward no evidence tending to establish the belief that training upon the system introduced will give us men with real adaptability for naval war, and he says, if we are to abolish the old training system, it is surely not too much to ask that the one substituted for it should give reasonable promise of developing faculty as well as of imparting knowledge. On the 20th inst. Mr. G. R. Thursfield is to read a paper on this important subject at the Royal United Service Institution, a copy of which should be in the hands of members early next week. This lecture will be an occasion for both sides to place their views on record, and it is to be hoped that not only retired, but active officers will be present, and young as well as old will state their opinions clearly and frankly for the public interest.

Navv Notes.

Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of York have graciously promised to present the prizes to the cadets of the Thames Nautical Training College, on Thursday, July 19. The Committee of the Worcester have engaged the steamer Eagle, of the General Steam Navigation Company, to take the Royal visitors and a large company to the Worcester, off Greenhithe, on the occasion. The steamer will start at noon from Fresh Wharf, London Bridge. This occasion has particular interest since it has been reported that Mr. Goschen intended to withdraw from the Worcester and the Conway the nominations for naval cadetships in the Royal Service which have hitherto been allotted to these mercantile training ships. It is to be hoped there is no truth in the rumour, and it would be a happy and gracious act on the part of the Royal sailor if he were to signalise his visit to the ship by presenting two nominations this year instead of the one which is ordinarily given. The boys of the Conway and Worcester who have come into the Royal Navy have invariably done well. The double process of selection probably secures this, but our reason for suggesting an extension of nomination as a fitting memento of the Duke of York's visit is that it would be an appropriate sign of the good fellowship and mutual respect which now exists between officers of the Royal Navy and the Mercantile Marine, and which is so largely due to the increased knowledge obtained of one another by the infusion from the Royal Naval Reserve.

With the capture of Pretoria and the flight of the ex-Presidents public interest has shifted largely from South Africa to the Far East. The news from the Peiho is indeed of a nature to cause some apprehension. We referred last week to the circumstance that the foreign men-of-war at Taku had landed small brigades for despatch to the Chinese capital, and it has now become necessary to supplement these by an armed force in Tientsin, which place is being threatened by the rebels. Since we last wrote, also, the Centurion has arrived on the spot, as well as the Barfleur and some other ships. A sufficient force can therefore be put on shore for any temporary work. It will, however, be entirely wrong, and savouring of criminal negligence, if steps are not immediately taken to supplement the resources at the disposition of the Admiral by a body of regular troops. The objections to denuding the ships of a large part of their crews which have often been urged against the landing of naval brigades operate particularly strongly in this instance where a foreign and possibly hostile squadron is in the vicinity. It is not our province here to question any policy which the Government may think fit to adopt, but it certainly appears that the line taken is similar to that which ruled in the latter stages of the Cretan business, and that as affairs were then left pretty much to Sir Gerard Noel, so on this occasion they are being left to Sir Edward Seymour. The plan has its advantages. Sir Edward is a strong man, knows his own mind, and is on the spot, but if it should become necessary for him to take larger action, it would be most unfair to leave him the responsibility without at the same time assuring him adequate resources in the way of soldiers.

The proverb "Out of sight out of mind" comes to the lips when one reads about the gushing manner in which certain sections of the public are treating the seamen of the Powerful. These same people have apparently wholly forgotten that there were other seamen on shore in South Africa—seamen whose doughty deeds deserve every bit as much recognition as do those of the gallant fellows who shared the privations of Ladysmith. It is obvious, of course, that all cannot be treated exactly alike, but a little more discrimination than has been shown would at least have an element of justice in it. The initial mistake was not made by the colonists, but by the organising committee at Portsmouth, who omitted from their invitation to the banquet even those men of the Powerful who were not in the Ladysmith Brigade. The Powerful was paid off yesterday, and the men went away on leave. On the previous evening the Mayor of Portsmouth went on board and presented to each petty officer, seaman, and marine, who was either at Ladysmith or in the Modder River column, a silver watch. These watches, 300 in number, were, we are told, the result of a subscription taken up in London, and the motives of those who put down the money were doubtless excellent. It is a pity, however, that they did not exercise some gumption in their arrangements, either by way of making the presentation quite a private matter between themselves and those they desired to honour, or—and this would have been a far better plan—so widening the area of subscription as to have been able to be just as well as generous.

Everything that concerns yachts, yachtsmen, or cognate matters, from the pen of Lord Dunraven is sure of attention, and the two bulky volumes just issued by Messrs. Macmillan have been eagerly looked for by all lovers of the craft. "Navigation is in many respects a peculiar subject," so writes Lord Dunraven in his preface, and it is in one of its peculiarities that he finds a raison d'être for his work. Navigation may be, and frequently is, put in practice by those who are wholly innocent of any knowledge of its scientific basis. But although the mariner can, by the use of certain formulæ and tables which the man of science has prepared for him, carry his ship from port to port in safety, he will certainly, if he be an educated person, wish to get at least some idea of the reason for what he is doing and why he does it. Now, the ordinary books on navigation, valuable as they undoubtedly are, were not primarily written with a view of supplying this information, and it has been a happy thought, therefore, on the part of Lord Dunraven to fill the gap, and provide a book from which it is possible to learn the practical methods of navigating a ship and at the same time to gather why certain formulæ are used in the process and whence they have been derived. In "Self Instruction in the Practice and Theory of Navigation" Lord Dunraven gives just sufficient explanation of the problems, and just sufficient definition of the terms used in the art to be intelligible to the unscientific reader, and he does this in an unconventional manner which is not without its attraction. He has written, he says, as an amateur mainly for amateurs, but he has produced a book which cannot fail to be of assistance to any whose business is upon the sea, and which should be indispensable to the special class for which it has been produced.

There is a project afoot at Portsmouth for erecting a monument there to those officers and men of the Navy who unfortunately lost their lives fighting the Boers in South Africa. On it would of course be inscribed the names of the officers and men who lost their lives in the defence of Ladysmith, the advance of General Buller through Natal for the relief of that town, and those who met their fates at Graspan and other engagements in Cape Colony and the Orange River Colony with Lord Roberts. Those who decide to help the movement will be doing good, for it is appropriate, to say the least, that such a monument should be erected at our principal naval port to the brave seamen who are sleeping in their graves under the great African veldt. The Mayor of Portsmouth, we are told, prefers that an obelisk of marble be erected in the Commercial Road, immediately facing the Town Hall, and his proposition has met with favour from the other gentlemen interested in the scheme. Should the Mayor's proposal come to anything, the whole Empire will no doubt wish to contribute its share of the expense, in order that a monument may be erected worthy of the occasion, and one which will suitably commemorate the part played by her Majesty's Navy in the war which is now drawing to a close.

The Navy League is to be congratulated upon the improved state of its finances, for the annual report showed that over £2,000 had been spent during the year, leaving a few hundreds in hand. The League enumerates the present needs of the Navy under eight headings: (1) Improved ordnance; (2) increased number of battleships; (3) greatly increased number of cruisers with superior speed; (4) provision of floating workshops; (5) re-organisation of the Intelligence Department; (6) increase of the Naval Reserve; (7) a great increase of lieutenants; and (8) a naval staff college. In some, if not all, of these respects the Navy needs improving, and the Navy League will evidently have its hands full for some time to come. Mr. Goschen is quite out of favour just now with ardent reformers, but even these should endeavour to remember the great services rendered to the Navy by this capable Minister, and should, we think, hesitate to condemn his policy so sweepingly. At the same time there may be some foundation for the complaint that the current building programme has been planned without due reference to the capabilities of the private building yards of the country. It seems to us unwise for the Admiralty to any longer insist that ships could not have been laid down in the private yards and advanced with rapidity unless they are prepared to give reasons for their belief. There is, to be sure, the old excuse that armour would not be supplied with due speed, but this statement has been directly challenged, and the official reply is unconvincing.

The Duke of York attained the age of thirty-five on Sunday last. On the preceding Friday evening His Royal Highness left London for Balmoral on a visit to Her Majesty, and will return on Tuesday next for the Ascot week.

Admiral the Hon. Sir E. R. Fremantle is relieving the monotony of unemployment by visiting the Far East, in the waters of which he was Naval Commander-in-Chief from 1892-95, and took considerable interest in the development of our great naval base at Hong Kong, at which place he was staying during the past month.

Admiral Sir N. Bowden-Smith, Commander-in-Chief at the Nore, contributed on Tuesday last to the enthusiasm at the fall of Pretoria by sending his band into Sheerness to assist in the rejoicings.

Vice-Admiral Sir John A. Fisher, accompanied by Rear-Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, with eight battleships and four cruisers, was to leave Gibraltar to-day, after a stay of eight days at the "Rock," and returns to Malta as previously mentioned.

Vice-Admiral Sir E. H. Seymour, Commander-in-Chief of the China Station, has arrived at Tientsin, in consequence of the disturbed state of affairs in the vicinity of Pekin.

Vice-Admiral Sir J. R. T. Fullerton, of the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, embarked H.R.H. Princess Henry of Battenberg and her children on Saturday last for a cruise round the coast of the United Kingdom, and will return to Portsmouth on the 23rd inst.

Vice-Admiral Sir F. G. D. Bedford, Commander-in-Chief of the North American and West Indian station, arrived at Halifax, N.S., on Friday in last week, accompanied by the Tribune and Quail.

Rear-Admiral Day H. Bosanquet, Commander-in-Chief of the East India station, left Trincomalee on Monday last for Colombo, en route for the southern portion of his command.

Rear-Admiral the Hon. T. S. Brand, in a letter to the Daily Chronicle of Saturday last, refers to the inadequacy of our Naval Reserves, and suggests that, as the value of Volunteers for Army service abroad has been unquestionably demonstrated in the South African campaign, the Royal Navy should be similarly dealt with, and a Volunteer force, sufficient to meet the wants of our Fleet in case of a national emergency, be organised without delay. He means, we assume, a rehabilitation of the Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers.

Captain A. J. Horsley, of the Europa, arrived at King George's Sound, W.A., on Friday in last week, and left on the following Monday for Sydney, N.S.W.

Captain Leslie Stuart, relieved from the Tauranga at Sydney, N.S.W., arrived at Plymouth on Friday in last week by the P. and O. steamship Australia, and assumed command of the Collingwood at Devonport, in place of Captain F. W. Fisher, transferred to the Alexandra.

Captain F. E. E. Brock, of the Highflyer, is again delayed in his departure for the East Indies to relieve the Eclipse in consequence of machinery defects developing while the cruiser he commands was on steam trial last week. He will probably be able to leave during the coming week if further trials are satisfactory.

Captain E. J. Fleet, of the Edgar, arrived at Plymouth on Thursday evening in last week with relieved crews from China, and will pay off at Devonport.

Captain Vernon Tisdall, of the Theseus, arrived at Gibraltar on Saturday last from Alicante with the members of the Government Commission who observed the recent eclipse of the sun.

Captain H. N. Dudding, of the Iphigenia, paid off that cruiser yesterday at Portsmouth.

Captain Lewis E. Wintz, of the Goliath, succeeded in leaving Devonport for China on Saturday last after a detention of more than two months at Chatham since commissioning that battleship. He conveys the Coquette, Cgynot, Conflict, and Hornet to Malta.

Captain C. R. Arbutnot transferred the command of the Resolution to Captain W. Wilson, on Friday in last week, after upwards of two years' service in the Channel Fleet. Captain Arbutnot is mentioned as successor to Captain W. H. May, whose term at Whale Island expires in August next.

Captain the Hon. Hedworth Lambton ended the eventful commission of the Powerful by paying her off yesterday at Portsmouth. The ward room officers presented their gallant captain with a solid silver bowl on an ebony plinth as a memento of the commission. This had been in their mess since he commissioned the cruiser in 1897, and inscribed thereon were the names of past and present messmates and the actions in South Africa in which the Naval Brigades belonging to her had taken part: Ladysmith, 1899-90; Belmont, 1899; Graspan, 1899; Modder River, 1899; Paardeberg, 1900. These names should be placed on the ensign that flew from Captain Lambton's quarters at Ladysmith, and the flag eventually deposited in the Royal Naval Barracks, Portsmouth.

Captain E. A. Symons, of the Pomone, arrived at Penang on Tuesday with the Otter. The Straits Settlements form no part of the East India station, to which Captain Symons is attached, but it was necessary to convoy the Otter to the western portion of the China command.

Commander W. M. Sanctuary obtains the Travers pension, vacant by the death of Commander W. H. Hood, and the two additional pensions of that trust, established from April 1 last, have been conferred on Commanders W. H. Wright and S. J. Brickwell. Naval pensions for retired lieutenants have been conferred on Commanders G. H. Blake and G. A. Ellis, and Greenwich Hospital pensions on Commanders G. F. Law and S. J. B. Wilcox.

Commander R. G. O. Tupper, of the Pylades, has drawn up a report of the various buoys, beacons, and lights, for Otago Harbour, Dunedin, N.Z., together with other information of importance for navigating that part of the south island.

The late Marquess of Queensberry, whose early career was passed in the Royal Navy, left estate valued at £307,502.

Staff-Commander C. R. H. Robinson, of the Wye, arrived at Madeira on the 25th ult. The mishap to this vessel, which we mentioned last week, did not happen at sea, but occurred as she was being anchored at Funchal. When the engines were reversed the machinery was brought to a standstill, and it was found that the stern-post was fractured in three places, the rudder thrown out, and the pintle cracked. The Minerva, which was despatched from Gibraltar to her assistance, reached the island on the 29th ult., and will tow her to England.

Staff-Commander C. D. A. Morshead, of the Benbow, has retired at the age of fifty, and assumes the rank of Captain. This leaves twenty-three officers on the active list of Staff-Commanders. As the youngest is about forty-seven years of age, it will take eight years to wipe out the old navigating branch, supposing that any remain until the compulsory age for retirement.

Lieutenant R. F. Scott, the officer selected to command the vessel of the proposed Antarctic Expedition, dined on Tuesday last with Sir Clements Markham, President of the Royal Geographical Society, and met the celebrated explorer, M. Borchgrevnik.

Lieutenant W. Sims, of the Powerful, presided on Saturday last at a dinner at Portsmouth, representing the amateur theatrical company of that cruiser, of which he was the able stage-manager. Lieutenant (senior) J. Nicholas, Chaplain Rev. E. G. Cull, and Fleet-Engineer R. W. Edwards, were present at this final meeting of those who had so largely contributed to the amusement of their shipmates and comrades of the China Fleet, as well as their military brethren, civilians, and all classes in the Far East. During the stay of Admiral Prince Henry of Prussia at Hong Kong, His Imperial Highness honoured their performances with his presence, and largely appreciated the histrionic efforts of the Powerful's officers and ship's company. But, in addition to affording pleasure to many friends, they generously assisted others in need, which will not soon be forgotten by those whom they benefited.

Chaplain F. A. J. Gace, who was appointed last week to the Thunderer from the Royal Naval Hospital, Haslar, voluntarily resigned his post at that establishment, in which he had only served fifteen months.

Surgeon R. C. Munday, relieved from Jamaica Hospital after two years' service, prior to which he belonged to the Talbot, arrived at Plymouth on Tuesday last in the Royal Mail steamship Trent.

Surgeon A. R. Bankart, M.V.O., of the Royal yacht Osborne, had the honour of dining with Her Majesty at Balmoral on Friday in last week, where he arrived the previous week.

Paymaster A. R. Parker's recent appointment as secretary to Rear-Admiral Sir Gerard Noel, Admiral Superintendent of Naval Reserves, is in addition to that of Staff-Paymaster F. J. Krabbé, who has been employed in that position for nearly two years. Mr. Parker will, for the present, be borne in lieu of an Assistant Paymaster hitherto allowed that department, but the arrangement is not permanent.

Lieut.-Colonel J. B. Leefe, R.M.A., commands the troops at St. Helena; but the method that obtained during Napoleon's stay, 1815-21, of placing the island under a military governor is not pursued during the present appropriation of the colony for the custody of prisoners of war. It is somewhat inconsistent that while a large number of captured men are in detention, the administration should be in the hands of a civilian. Extreme military measures might at any moment be necessary to quell an outbreak, and it would be better to give a combatant officer the power for their immediate execution without reference to any other authority.

Major W. S. S. Harvest, R.M.L.I. (Plymouth), won the first prize for commissioned officers, with a Government rifle of any pattern at a range of 500 yards, at the Western District Rifle Meeting on Tuesday last.

Captain E. K. Story, R.M.L.I., relieved Captain F. T. Phillips in the Mars, and Lieutenant Prescott Sandilands took Captain R. Cator's place in the Furious on Friday last.

Lieutenant J. C. H. Rigby, R.M.L.I., seconded since November 27, 1897, for service under the Colonial Office, has been granted the temporary rank of Captain while attached to the West African Frontier Force.

The officers of the Havannah (commission 1855-1859, under the command of the late Admiral Thomas Harvey) dined together after their annual custom at St. James's Hall on Wednesday. There were present Commander Thomas A. Hull (Master and Pilot), Captains J. C. Best and Charles McLaughlin (Midshipmen), Colonel Anthony Malone, R.M.L.I. (Lieutenant of Marines), and Paymaster-in-Chief Norcott D'Esterre Roberts (clerk). The guests were Lieutenant George Temple, R.N., Lieutenants G. H. Finnes and R. FitzWilliams, R.I.M., F. H. McLaughlin (late B.C.S.), and Messrs. T. C. Brodie and W. Kerr. This is the twenty-sixth year in which these old shipmates have met together in this social manner.

On May 24 the Czar performed the ceremony of laying down the silver keel plates of the battleships Borodino and Imperator Alexander III., which are building respectively at the New Admiralty and Baltic Yards. On the same day the battleship Pobieda (Victory) was launched at the Baltic Yard, and the protected cruiser Aurora, a sister of the Diana and Pallada, at Galerny Island. The following are particulars of the Borodino and Alexander III., as given by the Kronstadt Viestnik:—The Borodino was begun on May 26, 1899; her length between perpendiculars will be 397ft.; beam, 76ft.; displacement, 13,566 tons; engines, 16,300 i.h.p.; speed, 18 knots. The Imperator Alexander III. was begun on September 5, 1899; her length over all will be 398ft.; between perpendiculars, 376ft.; beam, 76ft.; draught on an even keel, 26ft.; displacement, 13,516 tons; engines, 15,800 i.h.p.; capacity of coal bunkers, 1,250 tons; speed, 18 knots. She will probably be launched in the spring of 1901.

Lieutenant Tissot, of the French Navy, is conducting experiments with wireless telegraphy, apparently with some success. The Moniteur de la Flotte remarking that it has often been objected that in using Hertzian waves in such telegraphy there is a danger when messages are directed at the same time from two transmitters to the same receiver, confusion will result. In a general way, we are told, this is not the case. The Masséna was engaged recently in communicating with the shore when the Friant entered the harbour and also made a communication. The two messages were read without difficulty. It is, therefore, asserted that the French Navy is well on the way to make a satisfactory employment of wireless telegraphy.

Particulars have been received of the Japanese Naval Manœuvres, the first ever held, which took place at the end of April. Of course, the most remarkable feature was the fact that Japan was in a position at such a time to bring together a naval force so powerful. Fifty vessels were engaged—including five battleships, thirteen cruisers, one torpedo depot-ship, one torpedo gunboat, ten destroyers, and seventeen torpedo boats. All, with the exception of the torpedo depot-ship, were of high speed and modern construction, and they represented a fleet equal in fighting capacity to the combined Far Eastern squadrons of any three Occidental Powers, Great Britain alone excepted. It has been pointed out that the ability displayed by the Japanese in handling their vessels at sea is very remarkable, for, during the thirty years which have elapsed since their new navy began to be formed not a single ship has been lost through faulty seamanship. Great credit is evidently due, for, according to the Times correspondent, there was absolute freedom during the manœuvres from mishaps. Great secrecy attended the plan of operations. One squadron defended the inland sea; another attempted to force an entry. Victory rested with the former after an animated contest, of which night attacks by torpedo craft constituted a feature. It is understood that everything is believed to have worked smoothly and that the machinery of mobilization proved altogether efficient, though, for the reason already stated, it is not possible to speak with certainty as to these points. The sum of the public's knowledge is that after a week's manœuvres, which were not marred by any shadow of accident, the whole fleet of fifty vessels assembled safely in Kobe Harbour, and were there marshalled in four lines for the inspection of the Emperor, who, on April 30, entered the port in the Asama (first-class cruiser), and steamed slowly down the centre of the array, the crews of the various ships manning the yards and cheering lustily as his Majesty passed. The Emperor had been present during a great part of the manœuvres.

Baron von Spaun, the chief of the Austro-Hungarian Navy, announced to the Hungarian Delegations that in the future no more bronze guns will be made for the fleet. He anticipates that the military authorities will soon substitute steel, but in any case steel will be exclusively employed in the Navy. He also communicated the fact that the naval authorities have absolute faith in the water-tube boiler which will be introduced into all ships now in hand. The Austrians do not intend to construct any submarine vessels on the ground that the experiments carried on in other countries do not justify expenditure for the purpose.

The United States Naval Appropriation Bill having passed the Senate, the Secretary of the Navy is authorised and directed, if he shall deem it for the interest of the Service, to contract for five submarine torpedo boats of the Holland type of the most improved design at a price not to exceed 170,000 dols. each; provided that such boats shall be similar in dimensions to the proposed new Holland, plans and specifications of which were submitted to the Navy Department by the Holland Torpedo Boat Company, in November, 1899. The new contract and the submarine boats covered by it are to be in accordance with the stipulations of the contract of purchase made between the Holland Torpedo Boat Company and the United States Navy Department. The House Committee on Naval Affairs, at its meeting on May 3, heard testimony on the question of the submarine boat. This committee has already heard Admiral Dewey on this subject, who spoke greatly in favour of the little craft. An amendment was also made in the Senate Committee authorising the Secretary of the Navy to purchase from the Gathmann Torpedo Gun Company the gun equipment for one or more of the harbour defence monitors authorised in May, 1898; such equipment to consist of two guns for each vessel of not less than 16in. bore and not less than forty feet in length, capable of throwing the Gathmann type of shell, containing about 500 pounds of wet gun cotton.

SUMMER DRILLS ON SALISBURY PLAIN.

A large arrival of Volunteer battalions arrived on Salisbury Plain on Saturday last for training. The arrivals for encampment at Perham Down, within a mile of Ludgershall Station, were:—1st V.B. Cheshire Regiment, 32 officers, 600 men (Col. F. W. Blood); 2nd V.B., 22 officers, 700 men (Col. T. J. Smith); 3rd V.B., 21 officers, 800 men (Col. W. Mothersill); 5th V.B., 32 officers, 850 men (Col. Sir W. G. Shakerley); London Rifle Brigade, 30 officers, 500 men, commanded by Lieut.-Col. E. Matthey, the latter being attached to the Cheshire Brigade for training. The brigade commander is Col. A. W. Sheringham, who has a total rank and file under his command of 3,587. The London Rifle Brigade remains in training until June 17; while the Cheshire Brigade does not depart until June 30. The Manchester Volunteer Brigade, which also arrived at Perham Down, numbers 3,858. Three of the Manchester battalions remain up for training until June 16, and the 1st V.B. until June 30.

The arrivals at Bulford Camp included the Tyne and Tees Volunteer Brigade, constituted thus:—1st V.B. Durham Light Infantry, 31 officers, 730 men (Col. R. Burdon); 2nd V.B., 26 officers, 850 men (Col. D. Armstrong); 3rd V.B., 20 officers, 430 men (Col. A. Peters); 4th V.B., 20 officers, 850 men (Col. O. Perkins). Attached to this brigade are the 2nd V.B. Liverpool Regiment, 31 officers, 571 men (Col. C. Spencely) and the 7th V.B. Liverpool Regiment (Isle of Man), two officers, 50 men (Capt. R. S. Stephen). The Tyne and Tees Brigade is commanded by Col. C. S. Gordon, the total strength being 3,611. The Liverpool battalions remain in training until June 16, and the Durham battalions until the following day.

The total strength of the three brigades is over 11,000. With the Militia and other details encamped the force now under the command of Major-Gen. T. A. Cooke on Salisbury Plain amounts to 20,000 of all ranks.

ORBIT BRAND TOBACCO

TADDY & CO., LONDON, E.

Manufacturers of Cigarettes and Tobaccos in Bond for Export.

THE War Office has decided to at once commence the construction of a new battery on the Isle of Grain, opposite Sheerness, to strengthen the military defences at the entrances to the Rivers Thames and Medway. The battery will occupy a site between Grain Fort and Grain Wing Battery, and will command the Nore and the channels leading from the North Sea into the Thames and Medway. The battery is to be constructed on similar lines to Barton's Point Battery, Sheerness, the outpost of the Thames and Medway chain of defences, and will be equipped with long-range breechloading and quick-firing guns.

THE COLT AUTOMATIC
AND DUNDONALD GALLOPING
GUN-CARRIAGE.

Colt Automatic Guns, taking the English Service ammunition of
'303 calibre, and mounted on DUNDONALD GALLOPING CAR-RIAGES, are now being largely used in South Africa, both by Imperial and Colonial troops.

The Dundonald Carriage carries 2,000 rounds of ammunition, loaded in belts ready for immediate use, and is protected by patent armour plate.
The Carriage can be taken into action by one man and horse, and can be unlim-
bered and brought into action within the space of thirty seconds, the Colt Gun being then ready to pour out a stream of bullets at the rate of over 450 rounds per minute, or less if required.

The Dundonald Galloping Ammunition Cart is constructed to carry either 7,000 or 10,500 rounds, loaded in belts and ready for transfer to the Colt Guns at a moment's notice. This also can be galloped into action and unlimbered with the same speed as the Gun Carriage, and therefore forms a most valuable adjunct to the Colt Gun and Dundonald Carriage.

The Dundonald General Service Cart. Specially
adapted for South African Service. The lightest, strongest, most serviceable
Two-wheeled Cart made. Constructed with a Steel Frame and Hide Bottom.
Carries over 1,000 lbs. of Baggage, contains over 100 cubic feet covered space,
weighs about 600 lbs.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN WAR.

DURING the past ten days the war has had striking developments, some of them in a high degree satisfactory, others distinctly the reverse. On the 6th inst. the centre of interest shifted suddenly from Pretoria, and attention was divided between the menaced line south of the Vaal and the northern angle of Natal. Sir Redvers Buller by a brilliant flank movement to the west captured Botha's Pass, thus forcing the Drakenberg and turning the positions at Majuba and Laing's Nek, which were in consequence abandoned. As a set-off to this success the enemy, with singular boldness, made a descent on Lord Roberts's communications north of Kroonstad, cutting the wires, tearing up the rails, and overpowering the 4th Batn. Derbyshire Regiment (Nottinghamshire Militia). This incident, however deplorable, will astonish no one who appreciates the difficulty of securing against so mobile a foe a long line of railway with a force composed chiefly of infantry. Prompt and effective measures were at once taken to clear the line of the enemy, and a repetition of the inconvenience is unlikely in face of the forces now posted to guard the line. A despatch received on Wednesday from Lord Roberts made Pretoria once again the chief point of interest. On Monday the Commander-in-Chief attacked a large force of Boers under the Commandant General, Louis Botha, in a position found to be unassailable in front, situated on the Middelburg road at a point fifteen miles east of the capital. Operating with the mounted troops against both flanks of the enemy, Lord Roberts secured after heavy fighting the key of the Boer left wing as day closed in, and the troops were ordered to bivouac on the ground they had won. The battle was resumed on Tuesday and lasted the entire day, until General Ian Hamilton and the Guards Brigade captured the hill held by the enemy's left. General Botha then fell back to a second position, and during the night retreated to the east with his entire force. Lord Roberts had to report with regret the loss of the Earl of Airlie, the gallant commander of the 12th Lancers, who, with others, had fallen in this battle, the most stubbornly fought engagement he has had. The death of Lord Airlie will be felt by the whole Army as a great loss, for a better cavalry leader was not to be found doing duty with a regiment, if, indeed, in the Service. It is interesting to note Lord Roberts's assertion that Buller's force and his afforded each other mutual assistance in their recent operations.

General Kelly-Kenny on the 8th inst. reported from Bloemfontein that the enemy had cut the wires north of Kroonstad, and on Sunday the rails were stated to have been torn up at Roodeval and for twenty miles to the south, the enemy being in force at Honing Spruit station. Reinforcements were hurried towards Kroonstad from Bloemfontein, to attack the marauders who, no doubt, were part of the force recently sent south of the Vaal to deal a counter-stroke at Lord Roberts by an attack on his line of supply. To this force the 13th Batn. of Yeomanry probably fell a prey on the 31st ult., as well as the 4th Batn. Derbyshire Regiment, which was overpowered and captured at Roodeval on the 7th inst., after sustaining a loss of 140 killed and wounded, including among the dead, Lieut.-Colonel Baird Douglas. Lord Roberts, on being apprised of the interruption to his line, at once despatched Lord Kitchener with troops to push south and join Lord Methuen who was near Heilbron. The result of these timely arrangements was a decided victory gained on Monday by Lord Methuen on the Rhenoster over De Wet, who lost his camp and had his force scattered. On Tuesday Methuen marched to Honing Spruit, and finding all quiet there, returned next day to the Rhenoster where the railway was being repaired.

This second attempt to cripple and retard the advancing army by interrupting its communications shows how necessary it has become to put down effectually the opposition still existing in the Orange River Colony, the baneful legacy of the first great raid begun in the closing days of March. Until this has been done the 320 miles of rail traversing the conquered territory south of the Vaal cannot be considered absolutely secure. The portion of the Orange River Colony not yet reached by British troops, and which lies between the Drakenberg, the Vaal, and a westward boundary line from Heilbron through Lindley and Senekal to Ficksburg, has an area of nearly one-fourth of the whole colony.

It includes the important towns of Harrismith, Bethlehem, Vrede, and Frankfort, and until actually occupied by the British it will serve as a rallying centre for what remains of Mr. Steyn's Burgher army. Its complete subjugation is the more imperative since the major part of Lord Roberts's active forces is now north of the Vaal, and as his operations proceed, the distribution of the army will be constantly extending over a wider area.

Assuming the establishment of units to be complete, Lord Roberts took with him into the Transvaal about 46,000 men. There were, in addition, with General Hunter and Colonels Mahon and Plumer in the western districts, about 11,500, making a total of 57,500 north of the Vaal. In the Orange River Colony the total number may be set down approximately at 41,500, distributed recently as follows:—The Highland Brigade was at Heilbron, General Rundle's Division at Hammonia, with General Brabant's Colonial Division at Ficksburg. The division of General Chermiside was acting in support of Rundle, probably in the Senekal direction. General Kelly-Kenny had one brigade at Bloemfontein and the other near Kroonstad. Lord Methuen had removed from near Heilbron, having left General Paget's Brigade in garrison at Lindley, and was on the Rhenoster. The entire force operating in the Transvaal and Orange River Colony, exclusive of Sir Redvers Buller's Army Corps, is little short of 100,000 men. Of this number the greater part is north of the Vaal, depending for supplies on a single line which, notwithstanding the efforts of 40,000 men in the Orange River Colony, has been successfully dismantled over many miles of its extent, and one of its garrisons overpowered. In face of these facts undue leniency would be absolutely criminal, as it might result in the sacrifice of the lives of many brave soldiers hereafter. These it is our duty to protect in every way possible. Next in importance to the complete pacification of the Orange River Colony is the securing of an alternative line of supply. With this end in view, Lord Roberts, in co-operation with Sir Redvers Buller, will, no doubt, without loss of time, seize the railway from Natal Spruit station, near Johannesburg, to Laing's Nek. This will add a length of about 140 miles, exposed to attack in flank, to the total of railway communications to be guarded, but the advantages conferred by the shorter and more secure line traversing Natal are so obvious that the risk must be faced. Durban on the sea will be no further from the British garrison at Pretoria than Norval's Pont on the Orange River, which is 260 miles from Port Elizabeth.

On the 2nd inst. Sir Redvers Buller summoned the Boers at Laing's Nek to surrender, and agreed to a three days' armistice to enable their general to receive instructions. The armistice expired on the 6th, the day that followed the occupation of Pretoria, and as the reply of the enemy was unsatisfactory, Sir Redvers set his troops in motion with the object of forcing Botha's Pass. By a movement of the left wing to the west the 10th Brigade of General Hildyard's Division, with the South African Light Horse and the 2nd Cavalry Brigade on the flanks, attacked and captured Van Wyk's Hill commanding the Road to Botha's Pass. Two 4·7 inch and two 12pr. naval guns were then placed on Van Wyk and two 5 inch guns on the south western spur of Inkwelo, a mountain about eight miles to the north. On the 8th General Hildyard, under cover of these enfilading guns assaulted the enemy's position along the spurs of the Drakenberg, which were outflanked and carried in a dashing manner. Botha's Pass then lay open to a further advance, and on Saturday the guns and train were toiling with difficulty up the steep incline, the enemy having retired about twenty-six miles to the north west. The general advance was resumed on Sunday, during which the mounted troops were closely engaged, and the force concentrated at the junction of the Gans Vlei Spruit and the Klip River within the Orange River Colony. The point was about sixteen miles due west of Laing's Nek, which had thus been turned and rendered untenable. Next day Almond's Nek, the last defile leading to Charlestown Flats, was forced in face of a considerable body of the enemy with guns, the 2nd Batn. Dorset Regiment carrying the position at the point of the bayonet with great gallantry. The Boers during the night abandoned Laing's Nek and Majuba, and on Tuesday Sir Redvers Buller was encamped four miles north of Volksrust, the Transvaal frontier town, while General Clery from Ingogo was advancing over the Nek. The enemy were reported to be retreating towards Ermelo, and the soil of Natal was at length freed from the Boer occupation, which had lasted exactly eight months. General Lyttelton, advancing on the right, reached Wakkerstrom fifteen miles to the east on Wednesday, and received the formal submission of the town and district.

Generals Rundle and Brabant maintain a vigilant attitude, their chief care being to prevent a fresh raid southwards of the Boer force, some 7,000 strong, assembled between Bethlehem and Ficksburg. The enemy, who appear to have had fresh life infused into them, made a demonstration on Sunday night against General Rundle, with the evident intention of forcing his line, but the design was frustrated by the able counter-moves of the British General. Now that the railway north of Kroonstad has been again made secure, it is to be hoped that a combined movement will be made eastward in the Orange River Colony, in order to clear the country of all hostile commandoes still in the field. Botha's Pass having been opened to the passage of British troops, we should very soon hear of the clearing of Van Reenan's Pass and of the capture of Harrismith, with the branch railway running from that important town into Natal.

The columns advancing from the west have not been idle. Colonel Mahon joined General Hunter on the 6th at Lichtenburg. Hunter on the 7th entered Ventersdorp on his way to Potchefstroom, where he was due on Tuesday, and whence he was to move on Johannesburg. Colonel Plumer, operating further to the north, had occupied Zeerust, and on the 8th was marching along the Eland's River to Rustenburg. By these skilful dispositions the south-west of the Transvaal was being effectually searched. Sir F. Carrington is believed to be pressing southwards at all speed from Marandellas, possibly to anticipate, if practicable, the arrival at Lydenburg of the defeated Boers trekking north. Many rebels are still in arms in Griqualand West. A strong force has also reappeared to the north at Kuruman, fleeing, it is supposed, before the advance of Sir Charles Warren and Colonel Adye. Notwithstanding the opposition still existing in various quarters the general military situation may be considered satisfactory.

Army Notes.

An article of great interest concerning Boer tactics is in Scribner's Magazine. It is from the pen of Mr. Thomas F. Millard, who has been with the Boers in the war, and is an enthusiastic admirer of their methods. Not all his opinions are well founded, though doubtless many practical lessons are to be drawn from the war in South Africa. Mr. Millard goes beyond this. He says that any given number of Boers, almost under any conceivable circumstances, can defeat, and in a prolonged engagement destroy, an equal number of any regular troops in the world as they are organised at present. The strength of the Boer is in his individuality as a fighter, his individual method being reduced to "a tolerably well sustained unit"—the Boer commando. It is not true, says this critic, that the Boer is only good in defensive positions, but rather the contrary; and he cites Nicholson's Nek, Spion Kop, and what the Boers call the Platrand, which is the ridge forming Caesar's Camp and Wagon Hill, as examples. He asserts that at Colenso the Boers lost only six killed and fourteen wounded—that day upon which our losses were so terrible. In regard to the attack, Mr. Millard says that the Boer movement is slow, so slow, in fact, that at times it loses momentum, whereas in the attack of the trained soldier, when momentum is lost, the attack fails, unless it is immediately rallied and started again. In the case of the Boer there is no alignment, and little semblance of concerted action, although the concerted action is there. To conceal himself behind what would seem ridiculously inadequate cover is an instinct with the Boer, who advances in a crouching attitude, the thin widely scattered line moving forward until a point is reached within effective rifle range. Then the real attack begins. Each man has dropped behind some small obstacle or into a tiny sluit, and the assaulting line has disappeared. English officers rise up to scan the field and are at once shot down. The Boers are creeping closer and closer, crawling forward bit by bit, to seize some advantageous rise in the ground. The whole advance is fitful, until the decisive point is reached. "Up spring fifty or a hundred men, with rifles held loosely at a trail, and dash forward at full speed, leaping over the ground like Zulu runners. A few scattered shots give warning of the hotter fire to come. Prone on the earth go the charging Boers. Cr-r-r-rash! comes the volley. Up again, and a wild scurry on for half a minute before the second volley can come, then down again, each man under cover." In all these attacks, says Mr. Millard, the Boer sharpshooter plays a great part, sheltered behind his schanze.

Turning to the defence, Mr. Millard says that the Boer method is based on the same principle, and that the schanzes built by individual Boers at points selected for their own personal ideas, without regular formation or alignment, are vastly superior to regular trenches. In support of this contention he reports that in the attack on the Platrand, the Boers being on lower ground, could get parts of our loop-hole sand-bag trenches against the sky line and that they waited until the loopholes were darkened before firing. "In one trench carried by the Boers more than a score of Englishmen were found shot through the head near the right eye, conclusive proof that they were killed at a loop-hole." Moreover, according to this enthusiastic admirer of the Boers, they can build a schanze anywhere in five minutes. The other great feature of the defence is fire discipline. The Boers never waste a shot. Thus, according to the observer, at Colenso the British marched within 300 yards of the schanzes without having the least intimation of the presence of the enemy. He gives an account of the attempt to recover the abandoned guns, telling us that General Botha's powerful voice could be heard admonishing his men. "Hold your fire! Let them get closer. Wait—wait. Now steady—now steady—now steady. Not yet—not yet—not yet. Now!" Undoubtedly this narrative is that of an observer who has seen what he describes, but it seems more than likely that, when he sat down to record his experiences, he lent a little colour to the story, and the Boers have certainly been slow to attack.

The wisdom of Lord Roberts in forming a Colonial Division under General Brabant has been justified. The surrender of fifteen hundred Boers, with their guns, is indeed an achievement in a war so far conspicuous for the skill with which the enemy has retreated. With the exception of Cronje's surrender at Paardeberg and Eloff's surrender at Mafeking, the surrenders of men on a large scale have been all on our side. General Brabant's reported victory is, therefore, the more notable. He has, however, been uniformly successful since the outbreak of hostilities. As the commander of Brabant's Horse he did excellent work in the Stormberg region, and, as the commander of the Colonial Division raised in the Cape Colony, he steadily drove the Boers from one point to the other until he cleared the whole of the south-western border of the Orange River Colony, crowning this admirable piece of work by forcing the enemy to surrender at Ficksburg. Like General Darnell, who directed the retreat from Dundee, and Colonel Dalgety, the hero of Wepener, General Brabant began his distinguished career in the regular Army, but nearly the whole of his military experience has been gained in the Cape Colony, of which he has been a leading settler for the past forty years. He served with the Cape Mounted Rifles during the troubled years between 1860 and 1870, when he retired with the rank of captain. Later on he joined the Cape Yeomanry, as colonel of which he served through the Basuto War. It will thus be seen that he has gained his military skill in that best of all schools, experience. To the training of a British officer, he adds an unsurpassed knowledge of South African warfare. Curiously enough, General Brabant is one of the great farmers of the Cape Colony, and for the last thirty years has represented East London in the Cape House of Assembly. He is not only an able soldier, but he is a personality, and one of the pillars of British supremacy in the Colony. It has been said that he is of foreign birth. This is a mistake. He is a son of the late Mr. J. G. Brabant, of Kinderton Hall, Cheshire.

Mr. Julian Ralph, the American correspondent of the Daily Mail, in a letter from the front discussed lately valour as a factor in war. The Boers, he says, know nothing of it; we possess it in the highest degree. Could the contrast be more marked? The Boer is a hunter rather than a warrior. Hence his fighting method is to lie in hiding, and kill whatever comes in front of him, and to run the moment his own safety is threatened. At Talana Hill, Elands-laagte, and on the Modder River, he discovered that, whereas game is either killed or driven away, the British rushed at him without regard to life. He, therefore, changed his tactics, and took to a campaign of surprises, traps, ambushes, and concentration behind entrenchments. That is to say, he met British valour, not by a display of Boer valour, but by a display of Boer cunning, which, in isolated cases, proved only too successful. That he has a certain amount of courage is obvious, but it is not a quality on which his leaders can reckon. Hence his methods of warfare are based, not on his gallantry, but on his lack of it. Perhaps in a country where there is "a native fortress for every square mile," and an overwhelming native population, this was inevitable. But defensive tactics never yet won a war, and the inability of the Boer to adopt any other has lost him every chance of scoring a point against us during the present campaign. As a British officer remarked, "either the enemy must show valour or lose the game." In the British soldier, on the other hand, the quality is as much a part of his equipment as magazine rifles and smokeless powder. It is the impelling force, not of individuals but of the whole Army.

In the face of overwhelming odds, it has won all round the globe. It sometimes takes the place of strategy, and transforms failure into success. Like genius, it can defy all established rules and emerge triumphant in the end. It is the spirit of war personified. It makes men cool in action and modest in time of peace. That it is costly in the long run may be doubted. Without it, most likely, the tale of English dead in a war might be smaller; but its results are in such vast disproportion to the losses we suffer through it that it will never cease to be one of the main factors in our military equipment. At one end of the scale is the Greek without valour; at the other is the Briton possessed by it in an extraordinary degree. After our experiences in the present campaign, who shall say that modern inventions have rendered it of no avail?

Between China and South Africa Ashanti receives little or no public attention. Nevertheless, the situation in that turbulent West African possession is serious enough. With ridiculously inadequate forces Colonel Willcocks and other British officers on the spot are expected to organise victory. Means of transport there are none, and the consequence is our men have to depend on carriers brought from distant Sierra Leone and elsewhere, a state of things which reflects no credit on the Empire. It is the Uganda muddle over again. To begin with, a town like Kumasi should have had a proper garrison, so that the moment rebellion raised its head the Government could have crushed it without any delay. No such means having been provided, the rising naturally spread, and success gave it strength. Lieut.-Colonel Carter and Captain Hall have done their utmost; but, not being able to work miracles, they are compelled to remain in the separate posts they hold. Major Wilkinson is besieged at Kwisa, and Kumasi is in a very serious plight. The task before Colonel Willcocks is, therefore, a most difficult one. He has to face fearful odds in a savage population, in which the fighting quality is strongly developed; he is hampered by the want of carriers; the water courses at this season of the year are full, and, therefore, almost impassable to transport; beyond the Prah there is dense tropical bush to be traversed on the way to Kumasi; and, to crown all, he has not nearly enough men. The only bright features of the situation are the continued loyalty of the Bekwai on the coast, and the pluck and determination of our men. We await the news of the next few weeks with anxiety, though we feel full confidence in Colonels Willcocks, Carter, and Burroughs. The last named is now on his way from Sierra Leone with four companies of the West African Regiment. If by ability, gallantry, and self-devotion they can save the situation they will, of that the public may be certain. But the very greatest credit will be due to them and those serving under them if they do, as there is no disguising that for the moment matters appear to have assumed a critical attitude.

It is impossible to blame the Aldershot military authorities, as some would appear to do, for the disastrous results of the operations on Monday. They took the precaution of ordering the parade early, and it was really not until after midday that the heat became so excessive. Thus it was on the march home that the mischief was done. It is impossible, however, to find any excuses for the circumlocution department, which has year after year allowed the reports of general officers on the present field service cap to be ignored. What is the use of having reports on autumn manœuvres if these documents are simply to go their round in the ordinary course of routine, and then be pigeon-holed in accordance with long-established custom? For years past general officers have pointed out after manœuvres that the field service cap is unsuited for the use of troops in hot weather, and have recommended its discontinuance. But apparently their advice has been considered in the light of an uncalled for interference. Hence much of this suffering to which the troops at Aldershot were subjected on Monday. The usual course of procedure in such cases is for the general in command to be told that he ought to have exercised more discretion. Scapegoats must be found, and in the eyes of most people no doubt the Aldershot staff ought to be severely blamed. We cannot, however, see that the fault rests with them. If the men at Aldershot on Monday had been in possession of a more sensible head covering, and had been provided with a substantial breakfast before starting, which the local staff thought they would be, the result would have been different.

Mr. George Wyndham had to reply to a very severe cross-examination yesterday afternoon in the House of Commons dealing with the matter. No fewer than five questions had been placed on the Order Paper, and these were supplemented by as many more, indicating an opinion that the long answer given by the Under-Secretary was considered inadequate. It was necessarily so, for Mr. Wyndham was not in possession of all the reports which have been called for. He stated, however, that all the men were served with breakfast before they started in the morning, at which time there was a promise of rain. The heat developed very suddenly, and as soon as possible afterwards the men were halted and ordered to march back. At that time nobody had fallen out. The collapse of the men occurred on the return journey, twenty-eight severe cases of sunstroke, and twenty-seven slight attacks being treated. Four of the men died. All were wearing the field cap, but Mr. Wyndham promised that in future the helmet will be used where possible, and expressed the hope that before long the hat supplied to the troops in South Africa will be universally worn. Notice of further questions on the subject has been given. There is one point to which the military authorities might well direct attention: the tendency which some regiments have of putting on pace in order to be back in quarters in good time. This is frequently a fatal source of mischief, especially in hot weather, and to our knowledge on Monday last one or two battalions erred fearfully in this respect. Their pace, having regard to the condition of the atmosphere, was unreasonable.

The appointment of Major Engleheart, Royal Welsh Fusiliers, as D.A.A.G. for Volunteers at Headquarters, has occasioned, we are sorry to say, some disappointment. Major Engleheart has been trained in a Metropolitan regiment. "Now it is a well-known fact," a worthy correspondent writes, "that the difficulties of commanding officers in what are known as 'city regiments' are nothing in comparison to those of provincial corps. The training of an adjutant in a corps with several 'out-stations' must be of exceptional value, and one would have thought that the list of officers in this category would have been gone through, and that officer chosen who had put in the most successful five years. Such a man's advice and experience would have been invaluable. Instead of that an adjutant is chosen who has served under a commanding officer who runs the whole regiment himself. The only conclusion which anyone can arrive at is that the new arrangement is intended to be a bigger farce than those who were able to look ahead supposed it would prove. One only has to put this and that together and the whole puzzle is explained." Our correspondent expresses himself a little forcibly, but he ventilates the views of many provincial commanding officers, who feel that the great bulk of the Volunteer force, and certainly the artillery branch, the most important of all, will not benefit by the recent selection. Major Engleheart is a zealous soldier, and will doubtless discharge his duties admirably; but there is no denying that at first sight the arguments of our correspondent are forcible.

Major Palliser, in a letter to the Standard, ventures to doubt whether there is so much cause for alarm as some are disposed to think of a Russian demonstration on our Indian frontier. There is no questioning the soundness of his reasoning. Russia has her hands full enough at present without desiring to embark on an enterprise fraught with so many dangers. The situation has changed enormously of recent years; and, as Major Palliser points out, the Czar's scheme for the improvement of Siberia, and the turning to account of the immense mineral resources of that province, will go a long way to frustrate the plans of enterprising young officers on the general staff. The war in South Africa will not be without its effect in showing what a formidable array of strength we could bring into the field on the Indian frontier should any serious attempt be made to question our supremacy in that quarter. Captain Schemensky's recent lecture is the text upon which Major Palliser writes. This shows at once how little the Russians really know of the true feeling existing among the races with which they would have to deal. It is one thing for lecturers to ventilate opinions, but quite another for governments to act. The policy pursued lately by the Government of India is a guarantee that we are up and doing. No one recognises the fact more thoroughly than the Russians themselves. We are disposed, therefore, to agree with Major Palliser that the utterances of the Russian general staff are not to be taken too seriously. If there were any absolute fear of an immediate advance, it is scarcely likely that plans would be laid bare as they are. It is not the practice of Russian diplomatists to take the world into their confidence. So long as the members of the general staff are allowed to talk freely, it is more or less a certainty that the ministers of the Czar have other fish to fry. If they had not, the officers in question would receive a necessary reminder as to the desirability of caution. So long as they are permitted to expound their views with freedom there is less chance of systematic action, though it would be unwise, of course, for us to relax our exertions and fail to prepare ourselves for the struggle, should it come.

On Tuesday the House of Commons will be engaged with the further consideration of the Army Estimates. The votes to be taken are those for transports, remounts, and provisions, and an interesting debate is expected. A question of considerable interest to officers in the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers will also, by the way, be raised in the House on Tuesday night. Mr. Charles Shaw has given notice of his intention to ask the Under-Secretary for War whether, in view of the fact that in the infantry and cavalry lieutenants are promoted to fill vacancies irrespective of their service, and seeing that such promotion is being attained at the present moment in about seven or eight years, the rule that lieutenants in the Royal Engineers and Artillery can in no case receive promotion until they have served eleven years in that rank may be considered with a view to modification. The Ordnance corps have long felt that they suffer a grievance under this rule, and Mr. Wyndham's answer will be awaited with interest. One or two other questions affecting the Army which are to be put in the House next week are deserving of note. Sir Charles Dilke on Monday proposes to ask whether a field state showing the numbers and composition of the battalion of the 60th Rifles engaged at Farquhar's Farm, near Lombard's Kop on the 31st of October, is in possession of the War Office. What Sir Charles particularly wishes to elucidate are the number of officers present with the battalion, and how many of such officers had been with the battalion for at least two years—points about which a good deal has been heard in Service circles of late. On Friday Sir Howard Vincent will ask the Under-Secretary for War, if when the services of the troops raised in the Colonies can be dispensed with by Lord Roberts, the War Office will endeavour to facilitate representatives of the contingents visiting the Mother Country. There is undoubtedly a strong desire on the part of the public to have an opportunity of testifying to their appreciation of the help rendered by the Colonials in South Africa. Her Majesty's Government have shown themselves so anxious to tighten the bonds between the Mother Country and the Colonies, that we are encouraged to hope that they will not disappoint public expectation in the present instance.

Major-General R. B. Lane has set on foot a movement which cannot fail to command support. As yet no monument exists in Egypt to the memory of Sir Ralph Abercrombie. It is proposed, therefore, to raise one by public subscription, on the site of the battle of Alexandria, where Abercrombie received his death-wound. The monument will act also as a memorial to those who fell in action in Egypt a century ago. It is intended that the monument shall be ready by February, 1901, which year will be the centenary of Abercrombie's death. Subscriptions may be sent to the manager of the Bank of Egypt, Limited, in London or Alexandria. Major-General Lane, commanding the troops in garrison at Alexandria and Mr. E. B. Gould, H.M.'s Consul-General, have charged themselves with the duty of making all arrangements. We feel sure that there will be a ready response to their appeal for funds.

In the Army List for this month the arrangements of distribution of the Royal Field Artillery are revised. The several batteries are now shown by Brigade Divisions, "a key to the batteries" being provided so as to indicate clearly where each unit is to be found.

There is no disguising that the selection of Lieut.-Colonel Sir H. McCallum for the vacant Queen's Aide-de-Campship has occasioned some heartburning. Sir Henry McCallum has spent most of his service in Colonial employ, and is now Governor of a colony. There is little prospect of his reverting to military employment. He has done no duty as a soldier for years, and yet he is given a much-prized reward which usually goes to an officer of special distinction. Not only the corps of Royal Engineers, but all arms of the Service, consider that a dangerous precedent has been established. With a big war going on, in which so many brave men are distinguishing themselves, it might have been considered well to have left the vacancy open for a time, until the strong claims of those now in the field could be gone into.

Lieut.-Colonel (Major) A. W. Thorneycroft, Royal Scots Fusiliers, has found a defender in the Natal correspondent of the Daily News. Not that Colonel Thorneycroft requires to be defended before those who know him, and are able to value his sterling worth as a soldier. After describing the position on the hill at Spion Kop, the correspondent says:—

"At that moment the 'strong fighting man' arrived to see the Boers coming from their trenches to receive the surrender of the men for whom he had just been made responsible. Rushing forward, he stood between the enemy and their prey, and cried out to the former: 'No. No surrender. I am in command here. Back to your trenches, or we fire on you.' There was something in this man that put new spirit into the troops, and some dismay into the minds of the enemy, who scampered back to their trenches, 'Pick up your rifles and take cover,' and with renewed courage, our men continued the fight. It is but fair, therefore, to remember that if Colonel Thorneycroft was responsible for the surrender of the hill, it was he who saved the surrender of the men. It is all very well to condemn the action of these men for laying down their arms. We who witnessed the deadly rifle fire, the shrapnel bursting over them, and the ghastly effects of the exploding shells which went on hour after hour—we cannot condemn them. It must also be understood that there was no shelter from either shell or shrapnel; by lying down flat behind some trifling obstruction there was shelter to some extent from rifle fire, but that was all. At no engagement in the Natal campaign was the fire more deadly and more terrible in its effects than at Spion Kop. Most of the damage was caused by shell, the effects of which in many cases are too horrible to describe. And all this was performed by an invisible foe."

When it is considered that Major Thorneycroft had only a few weeks before obtained his majority in the Royal Scots Fusiliers, it will be seen how badly he has been treated. Whatever he did was bound to be considered wrong by somebody. It would be cruelly unfair if this able and gallant soldier were to suffer permanently in reputation because, forsooth, he adopted about the only course that was open to him. By every mail from South Africa letters reach us from officers, many of whom say they do not know him, assuring us that he has the sympathy of the whole Natal Field Force.

A ROYAL NAVAL AND MILITARY BAZAAR, in aid of Princess Christian's Homes for Disabled Soldiers and Sailors, will be held at Olympia on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. Thirteen military bands have been kindly lent by the colonels of the different regiments. Six of these include Household Brigade bands. The Souvenir book will be sold at 10s. 6d. The Princess Christian will open the bazaar on the first day, when the admission will be 10s. until six, and 5s. after six. On the second day the Right Hon. G. Goschen, First Lord of the Admiralty, will open the bazaar, and the prices of admission will be 10s. until six and 2s. 6d. after six o'clock, and on the third day the Marchioness of Lansdowne—admission 5s. until six and 1s. after six. The bazaar will be opened at two o'clock each day.

Army Personal.

The Duke of Cambridge will preside at the fifty-fifth anniversary meeting of the Soldiers' Daughters' Home, at the Home, Hampstead, on Monday next, at 3 p.m.

Lord Wolseley has consented to preside, on the 25th inst., at the dinner at the Hotel Cecil to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of the first Volunteer Review before Her Majesty, which was held in Hyde Park. Amongst the guests will be General Sir Evelyn Wood, Major-Generals Trotter and A. E. Turner, and also several veteran Volunteers, including Sir E. J. Poynter, who was then a private in the Artists' Corps; Mr. W. H. Cummings, now Principal of the Guildhall School of Music; Mr. Lewes Dickinson, the portrait painter; Dr. F. J. Furnivall; and Mr. George Allen, the publisher, then a private in the 19th Middlesex.

The success which has attended Lord Roberts's advance has met with generous and enthusiastic appreciation in the United States, and the Army and Navy Journal writes very pleasantly of the veteran Field-Marshal:—

"The success of Lord Roberts, if it has done nothing else, has rendered less unwarlike the snowy locks that ornament the head of more than one warrior in the world, and it ought to give a lightness to the tread of our G. A. R. veterans on the coming Decoration Day. 'Lagging superfluous on the stage' may lose its old meaning in the light of victories won by a general over whose head have passed 67 winters. Those who have been so ready to propose an age limit for generals in the British Army will doubtless now subside into silence for a period. Doubtless old age is in itself a disadvantage, but physical disadvantage, as is well pointed out by a military critic of high standing, may be more than counterbalanced by the greater experience and knowledge of his profession acquired by the older general. Many generals have before now done their best work when they were as old as, if not older than, Lord Roberts. Tilly was 61 when he gained the battle of White Hill in the Thirty Years' War and began a uniformly successful course of campaigns which lasted six years, and he was 72 when he performed his last service, the taking of Magdeburg. Turenne was 63 at the time of his brilliant though cruel campaign on the Rhine, and had not a cannon ball cut short his career the next year he might have added to his laurels. Suwaroff, the Russian general, at the age of 69 defeated Moreau and several of Napoleon's other generals in an Italian campaign. Even at the age of 79 the Duke of Wellington showed that his capacity was not impaired, by the very skilful military precautions which he took against the London Chartists."

On the occasion of the dinner held on the 8th inst. at the Hotel Cecil to commemorate the opening of the Indian Mutiny campaign of 1857, General Sir Henry Norman, as chairman, in the names of those present sent a message to Lord Roberts at Pretoria: "Your Delhi comrades heartily congratulate you on your glorious successes, and enthusiastically drink your health."

During the drill season the Duke of Connaught will make his headquarters at the Curragh, while the Duchess of Connaught will reside chiefly at Castleblayney, Monaghan.

Lieut.-General Sir George White received on Tuesday the freedom of the City of Belfast, the ceremony taking place with the customary formalities, and amidst a scene of enthusiasm in Ormeau Park. In the evening he was the principal guest at a dinner given in the Ulster Hall. His health was proposed by the Marquess of Dufferin, who said that among the glorious band of warriors who had fought in South Africa there was no figure that stood out in more resplendent relief than that of Sir George White. Sir George acknowledged the toast, being received with great cordiality.

Major-General Viscount Frankfort de Montmorency has been selected to sit in the House of Lords as a representative peer for Ireland in the room of Lord Inchiquin, deceased.

Major-General F. S. Russell, C.M.G., is named for the vacant Colonelcy of the 1st (Royal) Dragoons. The appointment certainly would have much to recommend it, and could not fail to give satisfaction in Berlin, where General Russell was Military Attaché from March, 1889, to June, 1891.

Major-General Sir Reginald Wingate is to have conferred upon him the freedom of the burgh of Dunbar, near which place he is residing while on leave, in recognition of his distinguished services as a soldier and as Governor-General of the Soudan.

Major-General R. S. S. Baden-Powell has been selected to administer the Malwani and Zeerast districts. The relief force under Colonel Mahon has, meanwhile, marched south and joined Sir Archibald Hunter. From this it appears that the column under General Baden-Powell, composed of the Mafeking garrison and Colonel Plumer's troops, are not to be used for a move on Pretoria, but rather for the purpose of holding and securing the territory won in the neighbourhood of Mafeking.

Colonel A. E. Duthy is confirmed as Colonel on the staff, commanding R.A., Eastern District, as from January 15 last, the date upon which he took up the temporary employment.

Colonel W. W. M. Smith, half-pay, R.A., has been appointed D.A.A.G. for Instruction, Western District, vice Colonel G. Poignand, whose five years expired on the 1st prox.

The will of Colonel Sir F. A. Marindin, R.E., Inspector of Railways under the Board of Trade, who died recently, has been proved under £7,075 gross, including personality of the net value of £1,768. Sir Francis left all his property to his wife, daughter of Sir William Stevenson.

Lieut.-Colonel W. E. Blewitt, R.A., on return from active service in South Africa, has been appointed a member of the Ordnance Committee. He will take up his duties on July 10 in relief of Colonel F. C. Morgan, R.A.

Lieut.-Colonel C. A. B. Burroughs having arrived on the coast and assumed command of the West African Regiment on appointment, left Sierra Leone on Thursday, in command of four companies, in the Albertville, for the Gold Coast, for service in the expedition to Kumasi.

Brevet Lieut.-Colonels C. Fergusson, D.S.O., Grenadier Guards, and A. de S. McKerrall, Cameron Highlanders; Major R. H. Penton, D.S.O., and Brevet Major E. A. Stanton, Oxfordshire Light Infantry, have been granted the 3rd Class of the Medjidie by the Khedive in recognition of their services in connection with the operations at Shukaba, Blue Nile.

Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel F. J. Nason, D.S.O., Scottish Rifles, has been granted the 3rd Class of the Osmanieh by the Khedive, in recognition of his services in connection with the operations at Shukaba, Blue Nile.

Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel J. Collinson, O.B., Northamptonshire Regiment, and local Lieut.-Colonel W. H. H. Drage, A.S.C., attached to the Egyptian Army, have had conferred upon them by the Khedive the 3rd Class of the Major W. N. Lloyd, retired list, R.A., has been appointed to the command of the Cheshire and Carnarvon Artillery Volunteers, headquarters, Chester.

Major E. F. J. Blakeney, A.S.C., has been selected for special service on the West Coast of Africa.

Major F. W. P. Angelo, 9th Bengal Lancers, has been granted a year's extension of service as an Inspecting Officer Imperial Service Troops.

Brevet-Major G. R. Macanley, R.E., Director of Railways, and G. de H. Smith, I.S.C., Inspector Kassala, have had conferred upon them by the Khedive the rank of Kaimakam, with effect from May 20, in recognition of their valuable services to the Egyptian Government.

Brevet-Major E. E. Bernard, A.S.C., Financial Secretary, Military Department, has been promoted by the Khedive from Kaimakam to the status of Miralai, with effect from the 1st inst., in recognition of his services to the Government of Egypt.

Captain D. V. Pirie, M.P., late of the 3rd Hussars, left England on Monday last in the transport Montrose for duty on the Remount Staff.

Captains J. S. Liddell, R.E., R. C. L. Battley, Essex Regiment, and G. A. C. Webb, Royal Munster Fusiliers, and Lieuts. M. E. Sowerby, R.E., and R. G. Wollen, R.E., have been granted the 4th Class of the Medjidie by the Khedive, in recognition of their services to the Egyptian Government.

Captain W. F. Kerr, D.S.O., 1st Batn. Gordon Highlanders, has taken up duty as Brigade-Major of the 23rd Brigade in South Africa, commanded by Major-General W. G. Knox, C.B.

Captain J. H. Thresher, 2nd Batn. Rifle Brigade, has been appointed A.D.C. to Lieutenant-General Sir Baker Russell, at Portsmouth.

Captain R. C. O. Creagh, I.S.C., who has been on special service in South Africa since January last, is en route to England, invalided, having left Cape Town on the 26th ult.

Captain. E. L. C. Berger, I.S.C., in command of four companies of the Hong Kong Regiment, has left for Tien-tsin, for service in the expedition against the "Boxers."

Mr. E. F. Knight, the well-known war correspondent, who was wounded at Belmont, and suffered the loss of his right arm, was the guest of the Author's Club on Monday night last. Mr. John Blount-Burton was in the chair, and there was a large gathering of literary men present, and also three officers of the Powerful. Among the former were Messrs. Frankfort Moore, Percy White, Douglas Sladen, Ernest Foster, W. Spielman, J. E. Vincent, and many others. After an eloquent speech by the chairman in enlogy of the guest of the evening, Mr. Knight, in a modest response, furnished some interesting facts with regard to the battle of Belmont, and spoke, amongst other matters, of the excellent succour rendered by the Army Medical Service to the sick and wounded.

It is notified that those men who were invalided home before Jan. 1, and the next-of-kin of those who died in the campaign before that date, are entitled to participate in her Majesty's gift of chocolate to the troops in South Africa.

The Secretary of State for War has decided to refund to all invalids from abroad sent on sick furlough between Dec. 1 last and the date of the receipt of the War Office letter of March 30, the actual travelling expenses incurred in proceeding either to their homes or to a convalescent home, and in rejoining the station or hospital to which they reported themselves.

WAR SUMMARY.

Saturday, June 9.

Gen. Kelly-Kenny reported from Bloemfontein that the telegraph line had been cut at Rooodeval, to the north of Kroonstad. Two thousand Boers, with six field guns, were operating in the neighbourhood.

Gen. Buller's recent movements were made known in an official telegram. On the 6th inst. Major-Gen. Talbot Coke, with the 10th Brigade and the South African Light Horse, seized Van Wyk Hill after some resistance from the enemy. On that and the following day guns were got both upon the hill and on the south-western spur of Inkwelo, and under cover of their fire Lieut-Gen. Hildyard yesterday assaulted all the spurs of the berg between Botha's Pass and Inkwelo. In Gen. Buller's words, "the attack, which was well planned by Hildyard and carried out with immense dash by the troops, outflanked the enemy, who were forced to retire from their very strong position." Sir R. Buller added that he hoped he had obtained a position from which he can render Laing's Nek untenable. To-day Gen. Buller bivouacked east of Botha's Pass whilst the transport was being got across. The enemy had retired 26 miles to the north-west, having abandoned a very strong position.

An interview took place between Sir Redvers Buller and Commandant Christian Botha on the 2nd inst. It would seem from an account published by the special correspondent of the Standard that Gen. Buller impressed upon the Boer commander the futility of further resistance, and suggested the surrender of the forces of the enemy at Laing's Nek. A three days' informal armistice was agreed upon, and on the expiration of that time it was curtly intimated to the British commander that the terms he imposed of unconditional surrender could not be entertained.

Sunday, June 10.

Sir Redvers Buller telegraphed to-day—time not stated—that "With reference to my telegram of June 8, we halted yesterday to get our trains up pass, which is very steep. I find that the enemy were about 2,000 strong, in a very carefully prepared position, which they must be very disheartened not to have held longer than they did. They have all retired about 26 miles to the north-west."

Monday, June 11.

The only interest in the news from the front centred to day on the movements of Sir Redvers Buller. The War Office published a further despatch from Sir Redvers dated this morning. This told that last night the force concentrated at Klip River, at the junction with Gans Vlei. It was thought that there was a force of 3,000 of the enemy at that defile who intended to occupy it. They retired, however, as soon as our heavy guns opened fire. These were brought—so the general said—"smartly into action by Major May, R.A., and Capt. Jones, R.N. The South African Light Horse, the despatch went on to say, were hotly engaged while covering our left flank, and displayed excellent qualities.

During the morning an official despatch was issued from the War Office giving particulars of yet another "regrettable incident." The news came to hand in Pall Mall yesterday afternoon, having been sent off from Cape Town by Sir F. Forestier Walker at 2.5 p.m. On Thursday, the 7th inst., the enemy would appear to have surprised and captured the 4th Batn. Derbyshire Regiment, Sherwood Foresters, only six men escaping. Lieut.-Col. Baird-Douglas, 3rd Batn. Cameron Highlanders (attached), and 2nd Lieut. Horley, with 15 rank and file, were killed. Lieut.-Col. Wilkinson, Capt.

Bailey, 2nd Lieuts. Hall and Lawder (attached), Lieut. Blanchard, Canadian Infantry (attached) and 59 rank and file being wounded. The battalion which has thus suffered is the Nottingham, which left England on Jan. 11 at a strength of 780.

A message reached London from Pretoria, dated the 5th inst., to the effect that 150 officers and 3,500 men, prisoners of war in the hands of the enemy, had been released on the occupation of that place. "The Boers had intended," the message went on to say, "to take 900 of these with them, but were frustrated by the arrival of our troops."

Tuesday, June 12.

The War Office issued a telegram received during the night from Sir Redvers Buller, sent off from his headquarters at 10.50 p.m. yesterday. In this the general stated that he yesterday forced Almond's Nek, the last defile to Charlestown Flats. The enemy were in considerable force, with several guns in position. The brunt of the fighting fell upon the 2nd Batn. Dorsetshire Regiment, who carried the position at the point of the bayonet, and the 3rd Cavalry Brigade, who were heavily attacked on the right from the very broken country round Iketini Mountain. "The whole attack," the despatch said, "was directed by Gen. Hildyard, whose dispositions were extremely good. The artillery, 10th Brigade, and 3rd Cavalry Brigade did most of the work."

Another telegram from Gen. Buller, dated from Joubert's Farm in the afternoon, announced that he was encamped four miles north of Volksrust. Laing's Nek and Majuba had been completely evacuated by the Boers during the night. Lieut.-Gen. Clery was coming over the Nek from Ingogo.

Lieut.-Gen. Kelly-Kenny reported to the War Office from Bloemfontein during the afternoon that our troops from the north were at Honing Spruit, having defeated the enemy. Gen. Knox was moving out from Kroonstad to intercept the enemy.

A Reuter despatch from Maseru announced that 1,500 Boers had surrendered to Major-Gen. Brabant yesterday in the Ficksburg district, and that in the last engagement at Rooikrantz Commandant Olivier was killed and Gen. De Villiers mortally wounded.

Wednesday, June 13.

Sir Redvers Buller's force camped at Laing's Nek during the evening after marching through Volksrust and Charlestown. It was learnt that Gen. Botha had left, under orders from the Boer headquarters, two hours before Gen. Buller's force presented itself.

News of a most important character came to hand in a despatch from Lord Roberts, received by Major-Gen. Knox at Kroonstad on Tuesday evening, and forwarded to the War Office. In this the Commander-in-Chief stated that Pretoria and Johannesburg were both perfectly quiet. After surrendering the city, Gen. Botha retired, the narrative went on to say, to a place about 15 miles east, on the Middelburg road. He had a small force at first, but the numbers afterwards increased, and his being so near kept up excitement in the country and prevented the burghers from laying down their arms. It therefore became necessary to attack him, which Lord Roberts did on Monday. Botha's position was practically unassailable in front. He therefore stationed the main portion of his troops on his flanks, but Lord Roberts sent Gen. French with two cavalry brigades and Hutton's mounted infantry round on the left, and Gen. Ian Hamilton with a cavalry brigade, Ridley's mounted infantry, and an infantry brigade on the right. Both columns were strongly opposed, but in the afternoon two of Hamilton's infantry battalions were advancing on what appeared to be the key of the enemy's position on their left flank. This was almost gained before dark, and Lord Roberts ordered the troops to bivouac on the ground they had won. Pole-Carew's division gradually advanced in the centre, and by evening held the line occupied by the enemy's outposts in the morning. Lord Roberts further stated that on hearing that the Free Staters had taken advantage of his crossing the Vaal to cut his communications, he sent Lord Kitchener southward with such troops as could be spared to join hands with Lord Methuen in the vicinity of Heilbron. The junction was effected at Vredefort Road Station on Sunday evening, and the combined force marched on Monday to the Rhenoster River, where Lord Methuen gained a complete victory over the Boers under De Wet, took possession of their camp, and scattered them in all directions. He and Lord Kitchener were marching on Tuesday towards Kroonstad. Lord Roberts added that there was no need for apprehension as to the security of the army in South Africa. The line between the Rhenoster and Pretoria was at the time he wrote held in strength. Lord Roberts deplores the death of that gallant soldier Lord Airlie, and of two officers of the 17th Lancers. "Had to deplore," he said "the death of that gallant soldier, Lieut.-Colonel Lord Airlie;" and also Major the Hon. L. H. D. Fortescue, and 2nd Lieut. the Hon. C. W. H. Cavendish, 17th Lancers, all three of whom were killed in the action against Botha's forces.

In a telegram received during the afternoon, Lord Roberts said that Lord Methuen's losses on Monday were one killed and 18 wounded, and that the losses of the Derbyshire Militia at Roodeval were 36 killed and 104 wounded—the latter being in the Yeomanry Hospital, which was captured by the Boers and retaken by Lord Methuen.

At 9.55 a.m. Lord Roberts telegraphed that Lord Methuen marched to Honing Spruit yesterday and found all quiet. He had returned to Rhenoster River, where the railway was being repaired. Our forces were engaged all yesterday with Botha's army before Pretoria, the enemy fighting with great determination, but had eventually to fall back on a second position eastward. This they were holding when the Commander-in-Chief sent his despatch. It was stated to be slightly higher than the one which had been captured. Lord Roberts explained that "the extent of country which has to be covered under modern conditions of warfare renders progress very slow."

In a second message sent off three hours later it was announced that the enemy evacuated their strong position during the night and retired eastwards, and the satisfactory information was given that Lord Roberts and Sir Redvers Buller now afford each other mutual assistance. Our occupation of Pretoria caused numbers of the Boers, it is explained, "to withdraw from Laing's Nek, and Buller's advance to Volksrust made them feel that their rear would shortly be threatened."

Sir Redvers Buller returned to Laing's Nek, having found no supplies in Volksrust and Charles-town.

The town of Wakkerstroom made its submission to-day to Lieut.-Gen. Lyttelton.

Thursday, June 14.

A telegram was despatched by Sir Redvers Buller in the course of the morning, in reply to a message of congratulation—

"Many thanks for your congratulations. The troops it is my honour and pleasure to command can go anywhere. The Dorsets, who have been unlucky up to this, had their chance at Almond's Nek, and showed themselves as good as any of the others. About 150 yards of each end of the Laing's Nek tunnel have been blown in. The debris is in large masses, and will take a few days to move. Line otherwise uninjured and open to reversing station, and all sound to Sandspruit."

Friday, June 15.

A telegram from Lord Roberts was received during the morning, having been sent off from the Pretoria Residency at 10.40 p.m. It announced that Klerksdorp surrendered on the 9th inst. to an armed party sent on by General Hunter. The messenger from Klerksdorp reported that General Cronje, who commanded there, determined to surrender so soon as he knew for certain that Pretoria was in our possession. His example has been followed by many people in the neighbourhood, and the Court-house is now said to be full of arms. The Boers attacked the reconstruction train early yesterday morning a few miles north of Rhenoster River. Lord Kitchener turned out mounted troops and drove the enemy off before they could do damage. One man was killed and 11 wounded, including Lieut. H. A. Micklem, R.E. (in foot), and 2nd Lieut. H. F. Bigge, Volunteer R.E.

Lord Roberts telegraphed from Pretoria Residency a list of casualties in the City Imperial Volunteers during the fighting on 11th and 12th inst. :—"Please inform the Lord Mayor that the battalion greatly distinguished itself."

The Mansion House Fund now amounts to £957,900.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I have just read your article on "The Universities and National Defence." I agree with the main point it advocates, that the men at the "Varsities" should take their part in the defence of their country by entering the ranks of their respective Volunteer corps. I have a son at Oxford who has done so, and for the privilege has had to pay £5 on entering the corps, and subscriptions each term are to follow. Now, sir, I contend that if an Oxford undergraduate gives his services as a private for the benefit of his country that is as much as should be expected of him, and that he should not be asked to pay £10 a year to be allowed to do this. There are many men to whom this sum is not of much consequence; there are many also to whom it is a serious tax, and who will be prevented from joining.

A PARENT.

June 14, 1900.

[We are told that it is a question of numbers to a great extent, and that if the undergraduates did their duty properly the expenses all round would be lightened almost to vanishing point, which is one of the strongest arguments in favour of the action of the University authorities.—ED. A. and N. G.]

THE Commander-in-Chief has notified that Royal Reserve Battalions are to march past to the tune entitled "The Boys of the Old Brigade."

The Army.

CAVALRY.

2nd Life Guards will encamp at Stoney's Castle for musketry from the 19th inst. to July 1. Capt. Lord Kensington, who was severely wounded in the back in action in South Africa by the bursting of a shell is, by latest accounts, doing well and out of danger. Lieut. the Hon. A. E. O'Neill left Cape Town for England on the 28th ult., in the Dilwara, invalided.

Royal Horse Guards (Blue) will go to Stoney's Camp for musketry from July 21 to August 5.

2nd Dragoons Guards (Queen's Bays)—Major Douglas has returned from South Africa, and has assumed command of the Royal Reserve Regiment of Dragoon Guards at Newbridge.

6th Dragoon Guards (Carabiniers)—The retired N.C.O.'s and men held their annual dinner in the Duke's Saloon, Holborn Restaurant, on the 6th inst. The chair was taken by Col. Saurin, and the vice-chair by Mr. J. C. Howie, an ex-sergeant of the regiment, now (and for many years past) holding a responsible position at Chase Farm Schools, Enfield. The usual toast, that of "The Regiment and Absent Friends," having been drunk with enthusiasm, Col. Saurin remarked "that although in the hands of Providence, how little we could see before us. How few, if any, at this dinner last year thought that ere another year should have passed over our heads so many would be called upon to rejoin their old comrades, and again assist in adding honours to the standard of the regiment we all love so well." The secretary stated that during the year death had claimed three old and respected members of the association, viz., Mr. Barstable, an ex-sergeant of the regiment, who has two sons sergeants in the regiment, and one in the R.H.A., all three being at the front at the time of their father's death; Mr. Brookman (an ex-corporal); and Mr. Thomas Harmer, who served with the regiment in the Crimea and through the Indian Mutiny. He (the secretary) hoped that no member returning to civil life would fail to notify his new address to 39, Hogarth Road, Earl's Court, S.W., for the purpose of this dinner, and that help might be extended to those who were seeking to obtain situations should they stand in need of a start in civil life. Major Weston and Capt. Hayward-Jones, late lieut., were present, whilst many other retired officers sent letters and telegrams expressing regret at being unable to be present.

1st (Royal) Dragoons—The remains of Lieut.-Gen. Sir Frederick Marshall, K.C.M.G., Colonel of the regiment, having been conveyed from 9, Eaton Place, at one o'clock by special train, were interred at Woking on Tuesday. The Queen was represented by Major-Gen. Sir Henry Ewart, and the beautiful wreath sent by her Majesty was buried with the coffin. Major-Gen. Sir Arthur Ellis represented the Prince of Wales, who sent a wreath of lilies on which was the inscription, "For auld lang syne." The German Emperor, who sent a handsome wreath tied with the colours of the regiment, commanded Count von Bredow to attend the funeral. The members of the family present included Lady Marshall (widow), Col. Henry Marshall (brother), Lord Heneage, Mrs. Fairtlough (sister), Mr. George Marshall, Mr. Walter Marshall, Mr. Lionel Marshall, and Mr. Murray Marshall (nephews), Mrs. Heatley, Miss Marshall, and Mrs. Murray Marshall (nieces), Mr. Harry Shearburn, Mrs. Wilfred Marshall, Mr. H. W. Lawson, and Mrs. Willie Lawson. Amongst those present at the grave side were Bishop Brindle, D.S.O., Sir James Evans and Mr. H. W. Maynard (of the Union Steamship Company), Sir Algernon West, Sir Charles Scotter, Sir Barrington Simeon, M.P., Col. the Hon. E. Campbell, Major-Gen. Stewart, Col. Godwin-Austen, Col. Williams, Col. Sartorius, Capt. Wisely (Donald Currie and Co.), Capt. Ramsden, the Mayor of Godalming (Alderman E. Gammon), and most of the members of the corporation; Mr. F. K. W. Girdlestone (Charterhouse), the Rev. E. F. Bowring; Messrs. Beach, A. F. Govett, Macaulay (London and South-Western Railway), station-masters, railway police, guards, inspectors, the employés on the Broadwater estate, and representatives of the 2nd Life Guards and the Armourers' Company. Simultaneously with the funeral a memorial service was held at St. Peter's, Eaton Square, The Rev. J. A. Fairbanks was the officiating clergyman. Before the service Dr. Huntley, the organist, played Beethoven's "Funeral March" and "In Memoriam" (Rheinberger). The hymns "Brief life is here our portion" and "On the Resurrection morning" were sung, and Chopin's "Funeral March" was played as the congregation dispersed. The Duke of Connaught was represented by Capt. Clayton and the Duke of Cambridge by Major-Gen. Bateson. Others present included Viscount Midleton, Mr. St. John Brodrick, M.P., and Lady Hilda Brodrick, Mr. A. Otway, Lord Arthur Hill, Sir Nigel and Lady Emily Kingscote, Lieut.-Gen. Thesiger, Col. Curzon, Mrs. Bryant Marshall, Sir Reginald Gipps, Col. Farmer, Mrs. and Miss Farmer, Lieut.-Col. Neeld, 2nd Life Guards, and the Hon. Mrs. Neeld, Lady and Miss Hartopp, Mrs. Farquhar, Mrs. Miller-Munday, Mrs. Arthur Kennard, Miss Hoare, Mr. Howe, Mr. Alfred Burton, Mrs. Stewart, Mrs. George Marshall and Miss Olive Marshall, and Dr. Ridge-Jones.

12th Lancers—It is understood that Major Atherton will succeed the late Lord Airlie in command. What a loss his lordship's death is only those closely associated with the regiment can fully realise, for he was beloved by all ranks, who recognised in him not only a gallant soldier but a born leader, who seemed destined to rise to the highest ranks of his profession by force of merit. 2nd Lieut. Ollivant left Cape Town on the 1st inst. for England invalided in the Ustermore.

16th Lancers—2nd Lieuts. Shannon, Macarthur-Onslow, and Gilmour left England on Monday for South Africa in the Montrose to join headquarters on appointment.

21st Lancers—The regiment has now arrived in Dublin from Newbridge, and has taken over quarters in Marlborough Barracks.

INFANTRY.

Grenadier Guards—The funeral of Lieut.-Col. the Duke of Wellington took place on Tuesday at Strathfieldsaye. The service was of the simplest character. The Duchess did not attend the funeral, but she visited the parish church in the morning and inspected the arrangements. The body was borne from the house on a bier drawn by old servants on the estate, the pall-bearers being Mr. Hwfa Williams, Col. Wellesley, Col. Coxon (the late Duke's secretary), and Capt. Thoroton. The mourners included the present Duke (Lord Arthur Charles Wellesley), Col. the Hon. Frederick Wellesley, Gen. Owen Williams, the Hon. C. Howard, the Hon. Francis Bartie, Mr. Hwfa Williams, and others. Lord Lawrence, Lord-in-Waiting, represented the Queen, Major-Gen. Sir Stanley Clarke the Prince of Wales, Major Malcolm McNeill the Duke of Connaught, and Col. Herbert Eaton the Duke of Cambridge. There were also present the Earl of Portsmouth, the Earl of Buchan, the Marquis of Winchester, Lord Charles Innes Kerr, Lord Alexander Russell, the Portuguese Minister, Mr. G. G. Wellesley, Senor Albert Visetti, Sir Robert J. Mowbray, M.P., Sir W. J. Farrer, Mr. Jeffreys, M.P., Col. Seymour Corkran, Mr. Cross (representing Elizabeth, Dowager Duchess of Wellington), Col. H. Walpole, Gen. Du Plat. The Duke's coronet was borne on a velvet cushion. The floral tributes were numerous. The King of Portugal sent a magnificent floral crown surmounted by a cross composed of white roses and lilies of the valley. The vault was lined with moss and flowers. 2nd Lieut. Wellesley becomes Marquis of Douro on the succession of his father, Col. Lord Arthur Wellesley, to the Dukedom.

Coldstream Guards—Lieut. the Hon. L. d'H. Hamilton and Lieut. and Qrmer Girling, 1st Batn., sailed from Cape Town for England in the Custodian on the 26th ult., invalided.

Scots Guards—Lieut. Arbuthnot, 2nd Batn., sailed from Cape Town on the 28th ult. for England in the Dilwara, invalided.

Royal Scots (1st)—The annual gathering of old soldiers was held on Saturday last at the Horse Shoe Hotel, Tottenham Court Road, when about 50 sat down to dinner. Lieut.-Gen. E. A. Stuart occupied the chair, and was supported by Major G. Deane and Major W. B. Macdonald, and many former staff-sergeants, headed by Sergt.-Major R. Elliot, now of the Yeomen of the Guard. The health of "Her Most Gracious Majesty, the Daughter of the Regiment" was first given, and was responded to by the hearty "God bless her" of all present, followed by the National Anthem and "Rule Britannia." Then came the toast of "The Royal Scots," coupled with the name of Gen. Stuart and all comrades in the two battalions now in South Africa, and the battalion in India, followed by "For they are jolly good fellows." Gen. Stuart's soldierly address to the company was heartily cheered, and his presence in better health greatly appreciated. Thanks were given to Major Deane for arranging the happy gathering, and replied to; a most successful evening was brought to a close by all joining in singing "Auld Lang Syne."

Bufs (3rd)—The Princess Louise, Duchess of Argyll, who was accompanied by the Duke of Argyll, visited Canterbury on Tuesday, and unveiled the memorial just erected in the cathedral to 2nd Lieut. Monsell and 111 non-commissioned officers and men, who fell during the operations on the North-West Frontier of India in 1895 and 1897-98. The Duke and Duchess arrived by the 3.38 train, and were received by the Dean of Canterbury, Major-Gen. Hallam Parr, commanding the District, and Col. Kelly, commanding 3rd Regimental District. The unveiling service was conducted directly after evensong in the nave of the cathedral, in presence of an immense congregation. Some 300 men of the Bufs, under command of Major Smith, were present, and the band of the Carabiniers did in the absence of that of the Buffs, now a South Africa. The Mayor and Corporation of Canterbury were present in civic state. The loss of his lordship's death was a procession, and the Dean having offered by all ranks, who received a stillness as of even. Col. Kelly, on behalf of Col. Ommanney, officers, and comrades of the 1st Batn., then formally asked the Dean and Chapter to take charge of the memorial. The Dean, in accepting the charge, referred to the record of gallant services performed by the Buffs in various parts of the world, and expressed pleasure that they had in that cathedral so many memorials of the East Kent territorial regiment, including the first colours ever carried into a bastion, which were now deposited in the Warriors' chapel. Gen. Sir Julius Raines thanked Princess Louise, on behalf of the regiment, for the honour she had conferred upon it in visiting Canterbury to unveil the memorial. A former Duke of Argyll, he minded her Royal Highness, had led the regiment Malplaquet. At the request of the Dean, the Princess then unveiled the memorial, and the proceedings closed with the singing of the National Anthem. The Royal party afterwards had tea at the deanery, and, having been privately shown over the cathedral by the Dean, returned to London by the 6.35 train. Capt. Marriott, 2nd Batn., left England on the 8th inst. in the Tagus for South Africa.

Gordon Highlanders (75th).—Mr. Winston Churchill, in a letter to the Morning Post says: "On the 29th ult., west of Johannesburg, French was confronted by 7,000 Boers with 15 guns. An artillery duel lasted all day. On the 30th, Gen. Ian Hamilton advanced and attacked. Gen. French, with the Cavalry Division and Broadwood's command, left by Gen. Bruce Hamilton, co-operated on the left.

Gen. Smith Dorrien, commanding the Infantry Division, directed the actual attack, the 21st Brigade being on the left, and the 19th on the right. The City Imperial Volunteers, who were the leading battalion of the left attack, were sharply engaged, but moving forward with great dash and vigour they pressed the enemy hard, and drove him from all his positions in advance of the main ridge. It was a most gallant performance, and reflected great credit on all ranks. On the right the fighting was more severe. The Gordon Highlanders strongly attacked a kopje, and in spite of the terrible fire which caused heavy losses, carried it at the point of the bayonet with their customary devotion. After the Boer retreat, Gen. Ian Hamilton spoke a few words to the Gordons, 'the regiment my father commanded and I was born in; and told them that all Scotland would ring with the tale of their deeds. There is no doubt that they are the finest regiment in the world. Their unfaltering advance across the naked plain on a concealed enemy, in spite of frontal and enfilading fire, which spotted the ground on all sides with bullets, their machine-like change of direction as the attack closed, and their fine charge with the bayonet, constitute their latest feat of arms the equal of Elendslaagte or Dargai.' The 3rd (Militia) Batn. arrived at Aldershot on Wednesday from Edinburgh, and is encamped at Scroggs Bottom. Capt. McNab left Cape Town on the 2nd inst. for England in the Cheshire, invalided.

Royal Irish Rifles (83rd).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. arrived at Salisbury Plain on Saturday last, from Newry.

York and Lancaster Regiment (84th).—Capt. Thurnall had left India when the mail was despatched to join the 1st Batn. (65th) in South Africa on promotion.

Shropshire Light Infantry (85th).—Lieut. Atchison sailed from Cape Town for England in the Montfort on the 31st ult., invalided.

Royal Irish Rifles (86th).—Major Welman sailed from Cape Town for England in the Montfort on the 31st ult., invalided.

Royal Irish Fusiliers (87th).—Lieut.-Col. Rogers left Cape Town in the Cheshire for England on the 2nd inst., invalided.

Scottish Rifles (90th).—Lieut. Wood sailed from Cape Town for England in the Dilwara on the 28th ult., invalided.

Gordon Highlanders (92nd).—Capt. Wedderburn sailed from Cape Town on the 28th ult. in the Dilwara, invalided.

Derbyshire Regiment (95th).—Capt. Anderson completes to-morrow his five years as Adjutant of the 1st V.B. Black Watch at Dundee, and will proceed at once to Malta to join this battalion. It will be many a long year before he is forgotten in Dundee, for he has been an ideal adjutant, and carries away with him the best wishes of every officer, non-commissioned officer, and man. Lieut. McKinnon has been selected for special service on the Gold Coast.

North Staffordshire Regiment (98th).—Capt. Millburne sailed from Cape Town on the 1st inst. for England in the Ustermore, invalided.

Royal Dublin Fusiliers (102nd).—Major O'Neil has been appointed second in command, vice Major Hicks, promoted to the command.

Royal Dublin Fusiliers (103rd).—Lieut. Le Mesurier sailed from Cape Town for England on the 2nd inst., invalided, in the Cheshire.

Pay Department.—Recent changes: Major Worledge, Hounslow to Ayr; Capt. Pinhorn, Singapore to Newcastle; Capt. Church, Curragh to Hounslow; Capt. Bruce, Newcastle to the Cape; Lieut. Richards, Oxford L.I., on probation from April 30, Aldershot. Death: Col. Bryson, retired pay, died April 17, at Southsea.

Royal Army Medical Corps.—A correspondent writes:—"When the Army Medical was converted into a Royal Corps a crest and motto were devised for it. There is, however, no reference made to this in the Army List, as is done with every other unit with a crest and motto in the Army." [Surely the matter only requires to be represented in the proper way to be put right.—ED. A. AND N. G.] Major Cottell and Lieut. and Qrmer. Clarke left Cape Town for England on the 26th ult. in the Custodian, invalided. Lieut. Buist and Qrmer. Wooley left Cape Town in the Cheshire for England on the 1st inst., invalided.

Chaplains' Department.—The Rev. F. B. Norman-Lee sailed from Cape Town for England in the Ustermore on the 1st inst., invalided.

At the weekly meeting of the executive committee of the Sick and Wounded Officers' Surgical and Medical Aid Fund, a letter was read from the Lord Mayor to the Duke of Abercorn, forwarding a cheque for £1,000. The subscriptions received and promised now amount to £5,226. Further donations are still required, and should be sent to the Hon. Arthur Brodrick, honorary secretary and treasurer, Hampden House, Green Street, W.

WITH THE ARTILLERY IN NATAL. By CAPTAIN C. HOLMES WILSON, R.A.

I should like to say a few words more on the above subject, which will be so eagerly discussed when the war is over. The use of isolated long range guns by the Boers has not agreed with the orthodox ideas upon which our field artillery principles have been based. We have been taught to think that artillery should be used in masses, and that every battle ought to begin with a stand up fight between the guns. The first engagements in Natal went far to dispel this theory, though they have never proved the principle to be wrong. Artillery fire to be effective must be concentrated, but the guns need not of necessity be massed by batteries in the open. The principle remains the same; it is the method by which it is applied that must be altered according to the circumstances of the case. The fire of single guns can never be decisive, or very rarely so. Single shell are harassing, but do not lead to anything definite, and certainly cannot produce any very great results.

The Boers when selecting positions for their guns had the very great advantage of being able to choose their ground. As there are few places in Natal in which natural cover fit for artillery cannot be found, they were always able to conceal their guns. Then the use of smokeless powder completed the veil that Nature, assisted by man, had too often drawn across the Boer field pieces. There was nothing to indicate the presence of their guns, except the swish of the shell and the spit of its burst; the flash was rarely seen. Consequently, it was only natural to jump to the conclusion that this was the system that ought to be employed. So it was to a certain extent, if properly managed; but the Boers, though they were adepts at hiding their artillery, have completely failed to concentrate its fire. They wasted their shell in firing single rounds; this is one of the secrets of their want of success. Otherwise they had everything in their favour; the range of their guns was greater than that of ours, they were acting on the defensive, and nearly always had time to prepare their positions, whilst the country was well adapted to their schemes. All they required for success was a better system of drill, a more concentrated and persistent scheme of fire discipline. They dropped one, two, perhaps three, shell among a crowded mass of men; but then, just as their fire was beginning to tell, they stopped. If a battery stood still it was seldom shelled for more than a few minutes. At Vaal Krantz, on two successive days, their 6in. shelled two different batteries; but on each occasion—as the batteries never moved—after firing a few rounds it ceased. This has generally been put down to the fact that the Boers were either short of ammunition or believed that they were doing no damage. I think, however, that it was probably due to neither of these causes, but simply to the fact that they do not understand how to make the most of a chance when they get it. The effect of artillery fire is partly moral, partly real. If it is the moral factor we wish to apply it can be better secured by a concentrated fire than occasional shots from isolated guns. We must, of course, recollect that the Boers had not very many guns, and that they could never have commenced a duel with our artillery except at distant ranges. But this cannot be advanced as reason in favour of not adopting their tactics should our respective places be changed. Under such conditions the powers possessed by the defence would evidently be great, and it makes us pause to consider what form such a fight will take, if it ever occurs in the future. Will the assailants rely for success on a frontal attack, assisted by artillery fire, or will they engage the enemy in front while they also try to turn his flank? If the first alternative is to be attempted, a large proportion of the armies of the future will develop into siege trains; if the latter is tried, a very large mobile force will have to be placed in the field, in addition to the other parts of the army upon which the slower work will fall. The question will probably be solved by the use of both, but the mobile force will have to be larger, more powerful, and more mobile than anything of the kind that has ever been thought of before, while the remainder of the artillery will have to be partly composed of powerful guns.

The matter, however, might be reasoned further.

A Boer who was captured at Pieter's Hill said after the battle that they felt the fire of our field guns most through not being able to leave their trenches. He also said that they were very much afraid of our 15pr. shrapnel fire. But shrapnel cannot touch men behind cover; consequently the question crops up as to whether it will be necessary in the future to maintain three classes of artillery—heavy, medium, and light—or, in other words, position, field, and horse. If the moral effect of field artillery is the only factor that it can rely upon for success against earthworks, would not a 12pr., or even a lighter gun, be equally useful? And, again, against troops in the open, is the difference between the effect of a 15pr. and 12pr. shell sufficiently great to merit the maintenance of two arms, one of which is neither heavy enough to act as position artillery or light enough to be really mobile? At first it would seem not. But there are great difficulties in the way of a change, which would undoubtedly be met with opposition, and of the results of which it would at present be impossible to speak until we hear more of what our fire has done. The first difficulty to be faced would be one of matériel. Could a gun be constructed with a long enough range to fulfil our new requirements, and still be mobile enough to act with horse artillery and mounted infantry? And if it could, would it be possible to mount the detachments, that is, could the extra number of horses required be provisioned in the field? Then again, in what way would position guns be able to move fast enough during the fight to meet counter attacks or push home a decisive stroke? Or would a portion of the mobile artillery still have to be left to act in such a way should the necessity arise? To me this would seem to be an absolute necessity; but would not the light artillery probably do as much harm as the heavier field guns in such a case! The question is evidently largely one of matériel, and must be decided by the manufacturers. A light artillery could act with cavalry or assist the position guns; heavy field artillery cannot act with cavalry, can support the position guns, but cannot take their place. Whether a change is worth contemplating, or possible, remains to be seen. We might, however, suggest that there may be another way out of the difficulty. If the weight of the matériel could be reduced, and half the detachment mounted on the teams and half on horses, the question would be virtually solved, as far as the personnel of a battery is concerned, without any great addition. In the French Army under Napoleon the artillery was divided into Horse Artillery and Fortress Artillery. There was then no distinction drawn between Field and Fortress Artillery. A hundred years will soon have elapsed since the armies of the Empire spread their legs across Central Europe, and now at the end of the nineteenth century we are fast returning to a similar condition of affairs. The change, however, will not come at once. The traditions of the war of 1870 have yet to die, and it is improbable that the lessons learnt in South Africa will be allowed to swamp them all at once.

On February 27 our guns commenced to fire at 8 a.m. At 3 p.m. the bombardment was very violent, and shells were bursting all over Hart's and Railway Hills and the neck that connects the two. There were then seventy-six guns in action, and almost every yard of the Boer position was being searched by shell. On the low ground between the two hills they had a long trench; in front of this, behind it, to the right of it, the left of it, and behind it, the ground was covered with bursting shell. There can scarcely have been a square yard that was not exposed to shrapnel bullets, or a corner that was not searched by lyddite. The earth seemed to be alive with spitting, spluttering, fuming, and fussing projectiles, and yet through it all a Boer was rarely seen until the infantry attack began. At 4.20 the infantry advanced to the attack; at 4.45 they were running across the open between the hills to the right and left of the trench that stretched across the neck. At 5.10 they had captured the trench and were swarming up Railway Hill on the right and Hart's Hill on the left. The ground in the valley was a mass of dust thrown up by the bullets of the Boers; on the right and left the bayonets of the attacking companies glistened in the sun, and on the ridge beyond our foremost attacking lines those of the Boers who had escaped could be seen riding away. Above it all escaped could be seen riding away. Above it all the deafening roar of the artillery continued to drown every other noise, as the guns pursued the flying enemy with well-aimed shell. Never had the value of a concentrated artillery fire been more fully proved, and rarely had a better infantry attack been seen. The first proof of the moral effect of shrapnel was the group of prisoners taken from the foremost trench. From our side of the river they looked like a column of men in black, surrounded by a lighter fringe of troops in khaki. The artillery fire had been so severe, and had been so well maintained until the final rush of the attacking force, that the occupants of the trenches had not been able to retreat. On riding over the ground later on this could easily be understood. The place was absolutely littered with shell. Shell with their heads off, shell burst open. Shrapnel shell, lyddite shell, and common shell. Bullets, pieces, and cases. The ground was strewn with them; not a yard had escaped. It would have been impossible to have lived in the open under such a fire. Such was the result of concentration—a result that could never have been produced by other means. In the morning the Boers had gone. On Umbulwane they could be seen digging like ants, and carrying stones from place to place. But the lesson of the 27th had been too much for them, and on the 29th when we advanced they were retreating, and Ladysmith was saved.

FAMOUS MODERN SIEGES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—The following list of sieges has appeared lately in several leading papers:—

Khartoum...	341	Ladysmith...	118
Sebastopol...	327	Plevna...	94
Mafeking...	218	Lucknow...	68
Paris...	167	Cawnpore...	21
Kimberley...	123

May I ask you to correct an error in figures with respect to the siege of the Residency of Lucknow, which is stated at 86 days. This statement is incorrect. The siege of the Residency began at the end of June, 1857, and lasted until Nov. 18, 1857, 139 days in all. It is true Sir John Inglis with the 32nd Regiment defended it for 87, not 86, days when Gens. Outram and Havelock forced their way in, thereby saving the lives of the garrison, which was then at the mercy of mines ready to be sprung under them; but, as this force had lost nearly half its numbers on Sept. 25, when this reinforcement took place, which is commonly called the first Relief of Lucknow, it was found impossible to remove the garrison, as hundreds of women and children had to be considered. The siege was therefore continued for another 52 days, making 139 days in all, when Sir Colin Campbell (Lord Clyde) with 7,000 men, on Nov. 16, withdrew the whole garrison in safety. Therefore the siege of the Residency, Lucknow, stands fifth instead of ninth on the list, and when it comes to be considered that had this garrison been overwhelmed—as might have been the case—not a soul of the garrison would have been left alive, and there would have been a repetition of the Cawnpore massacre, seeing that during the Mutiny no quarter was given on either side.

Obituary.

Lieut.-Col. William Inglis, retired, late 5th Dragoon Guards, died at his residence, Appleby, Haverholme, Lincolnshire, on the 7th inst., aged 70. He served with the 5th Dragoon Guards in the Crimean campaign from October, 1854, to Sept. 14, 1855, including the battles of Balaklava and Inkerman, and siege and fall of Sebastopol (brevet of Major, medal with three clasps, 5th class of the Medjidie and Turkish medal). After leaving the Army he was for 20 years Inspector of Reformatory and Industrial Schools for Great Britain.

Lieut.-Col. the Earl of Airlie, 12th Lancers, was killed in action on Monday in the attack on Botha's position on the Middleburg road, Pretoria. David Stanley William, tenth Earl of Airlie, was the eldest son of David Graham Drummond, the ninth Earl, by his marriage with the Hon. Henrietta Blanche Stanley, daughter of the second Baron Stanley of Alderley. Born Jan. 20, 1856, he was educated at Eton, and joined the Army as Sub-Lieut., 1st Royal Scots, on June 13, 1874. He was transferred to the Scots Guards Aug. 28, 1875, and to the 10th Hussars May 3, 1876. Of the latter regiment he was Adjutant from April 1, 1883, to Sept. 1, 1884; and he held the same position in the Hampshire Carabiniers Yeomanry, 1889-93. He obtained his troop in the 10th Hussars Feb. 18, 1884, and his Majority Aug. 3, 1892. On Jan. 2, 1897, he was appointed to the 2nd Dragoon Guards as second in command, and was promoted to the command of the 12th Lancers Dec. 8, 1897. He served in the Afghan Campaign, 1878-79, including the capture of Ali Musjid, and action of Futehabad (medal with clasp), in the Egyptian Expedition, 1884, under Sir Gerald Graham, including the battle of Tamai (medal with clasp, bronze star, and 4th Class of the Medjidie); and in the Nile campaign 1884-85, including the actions of Abu Klea (wounded) and El Gubat (wounded), (mentioned in despatches, two clasps and brevet of Major). He left Aldershot in October last in command of the 12th Lancers, and took part in much of the fighting during the earlier phases of the campaign, and was slightly wounded. He was afterwards reported as ill, but on recovery at once took his place again at the head of his men, who would have followed him anywhere, so highly were his qualities as a leader valued by all serving under his command. Lord Roberts in announcing his loss, said in his despatch, received on Wednesday, "I deplore the death of that gallant soldier, the Earl of Airlie." And his lordship's sorrow will be shared by British soldiers the world over. The late Earl married in 1886 Lady Mabel Francis Elizabeth Gore, daughter of the fifth Earl of Arran, and sister of Viscountess Cranbourne and Lady Esther Smith. He leaves three sons and three daughters. Lord Ogilvy, who succeeds to the title, was born in 1893.

Lieut.-Col. A. Baird Douglas, 3rd Batn. Cameron Highlanders, was killed in action at Roodeval, Orange River Colony, on the 7th inst. He got his commission in the Highland Light Infantry Militia (as the 3rd Batn. Camerons were prior to July 1, 1881) June 26, 1879; was promoted Major, with the hon. rank of Lieut.-Colonel, March 2, 1898; and has been for some time attached to the 4th (Militia) Batn. Sherwood Foresters, which was embodied on Dec. 4 last. He had for some years filled the position of secretary of the Junior United Service Club, where he was greatly respected.

Lieut.-Col. Richard H. Heywood Jones, of Badsworth Hall, Pontefract, in temporary command of the Yorkshire Dragoons Yeomanry, encamped for a month's training at Harrogate, was struck dead by lightning whilst crossing the camp fields at Starbeck Lane on Monday. An umbrella which he was carrying at the time was shattered. Col. Jones had served for many years in the regiment, in which he got his troop on May 1, 1882, and his majority Jan. 16, 1895. The deceased was 47 years of age, was a magistrate for the West Riding, and had been in command of the Dragoons during the absence of the Earl of Scarborough in South Africa. At the inquest held on Tuesday afternoon the evidence showed that he left the officers' mess tent during a terrific thunderstorm on Monday evening to hurry up a cab ordered for some lady guests, and while crossing the camp field was struck dead. The lightning struck the umbrella he was carrying, broke two of the steel ribs, and burnt his chest and neck. The jury returned a verdict of accidental death.

Lieut.-Col. Archibald Adams, M.D., Indian Medical Service, Administrative Medical Officer in Rajputana, has died at Mount Abu. Born March 20, 1850, he received his professional education in Ireland, taking the degrees of M.D. at the Queen's University. He served for a brief period in the Medical Service of the Royal Navy, taking part in the Ashanti War of 1873-74 with the Royal Marines (mentioned in despatches, and medal). In 1875 he entered the Indian Medical Service, was elected a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland, in 1886; became Surgeon-Major in 1887; and Lieut.-Colonel in 1895. He was Residency Surgeon at Jodhpore, and Administrative Officer, Rajputana, and was one of the Medical Officers of the Bombay, Baroda, and Central India Railway Volunteer Corps.

Major the Hon. Lionel Henry Dudley Fortescue, 17th Lancers, who was killed in action on Monday in the fighting near Pretoria, was third son of the present Earl Fortescue by his marriage with Georgiana Augusta Charlotte Caroline, eldest daughter of the late Right Hon. George Lionel Dawson Dames. Born Nov. 19, 1857, he was educated at Harrow, and entered the Army from the Militia as Sub-Lieut. in the 5th Dragoon Guards Nov. 11, 1876, being transferred to the 17th Lancers on Aug. 15, 1877. He obtained his Lieutenancy in Nov. 1878, and took part in the war in South Africa against the Zulus in 1879, being present at the battle of Ulundi (medal with clasp). He was Adjutant of his regiment from Dec. 30, 1879, to Feb. 4, 1885; was on the staff as A.D.C. to the major-general commanding the Cavalry Brigade at Aldershot from Feb., 1885, to Dec. 1889; obtained his Captaincy in Nov., 1886; and throughout 1895 and 1896 was commandant of the School of Instruction for Yeomanry and Volunteer Cavalry at Aldershot. He became Major in Jan. 1896, and from June 2, 1898, till he proceeded to South Africa, was Assistant Military Secretary and A.D.C. at Halifax to Lieut.-Gen. Lord William Seymour, the General Officer Commanding the Troops in Canada. Major Fortescue married in 1895 Emily Elizabeth, second daughter of the late Right Hon. William Patrick Adam, C.I.E., M.P., of Blair Adam, Kinrossshire.

Capt. George Paget Ellison, 9th Lancers, died at Kroonstad on the 7th inst., of enteric fever. Born Dec. 7, 1868, the second son of Col. R. G. Ellison, of Boultham Hall, Lincolnshire, he joined the 9th Lancers as 2nd Lieut. Aug. 22, 1888; became Lieut. Jan. 4, 1890; and Captain Dec. 15, 1895. He joined the staff of Major-Gen. the Hon. R. Talbot at Aldershot as A.D.C. May 13, 1896, and went in the same capacity to Egypt in January, 1899, vacating his appointment in October last in order to proceed on active service.

Capt. Thomas Sikes Hichens, R.F.A. (13th Ammunition Column), died at Bloemfontein on the 11th inst., of enteric fever. Born Sept. 29, 1869, he joined the Royal Artillery as 2nd Lieut. Feb. 15, 1889; became Lieut. Feb. 15, 1892; and Captain March 1, 1899.

Capt. Edward Gordon Young, R.E., died at Kimberley on the 5th inst. of enteric fever. Born Feb. 17, 1868, he joined the Army, July 24, 1886; and became Captain Feb. 3, 1897.

Capt. Walmsley Donat O'Brien, 2nd Batn. Scottish Rifles, who was wounded in the fighting under Sir Redvers Buller in Northern Natal on Monday, afterwards succumbed. Born Feb. 1, 1872, he joined the Scottish Rifles from the Militia as 2nd Lieut. March 12, 1892; became Lieut. Oct. 29, 1894; and Captain Feb. 1, 1899.

Capt. Cecil Edmond Maguire, 4th Batn. Essex Regiment, Assistant-Inspector Gold Coast Constabulary, is stated in a telegram dated the 8th inst., to have died at Kumasi. He joined the 4th Batn. Essex Regiment in 1896, became Lieut. in 1898, and got his company Feb. 22, 1898. He had been in the service of the Colonial Office since April 8, 1899, and had earned for himself a high character for zeal and ability.

Captain William Brian L. Alt, City Imperial Volunteers, was killed in action in the fighting near Pretoria, at the beginning of the week. He was second son of Col. W. J. Alt, 22nd Middlesex Rifles, and was appointed to his father's regiment as a subaltern whilst at Oxford. He was promoted to his company in the 22nd Middlesex, Jan. 17 last. Capt. Alt, who is the first officer of the C.I.V.'s to fall in action, was a student at the Bar, and immensely popular both there and in the C.I.V.'s.

Lieut. Norman Marshall Johnstone, 11th Hussars, was killed in action on Monday in the operations under Sir Redvers Buller in Northern Natal. Born Aug. 29, 1872, he joined the 11th Hussars as 2nd Lieut. March 15, 1893, and became Lieut. Jan. 30, 1895. He served in the India Frontier campaign, 1897-98 (medal with clasp).

Lieut. Richard John J. Jelf, R.E., died at sea on his homeward voyage from South Africa. He was the eldest son of Col. R. H. Jelf, C.M.G., Commanding

Royal Engineer, Eastern District, and was born Jan. 4, 1872. He was educated at Eton and the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and obtained his commission Feb. 12, 1892, becoming Lieut. Feb. 12, 1895. He was selected for service in the Telegraph Batn. when on leave from Gibraltar, and was sent to South Africa in October last. After serving at De Aar and up to the Modder River, he was transferred with his section of the Telegraph Batn. to Sir R. Buller's command in Natal, and virtually acted as Director of Telegraphs to that officer throughout all his operations up to and including the relief of Ladysmith. His health subsequently broke down, and he was invalided home in the troopship Dihwara, and died on June 2. In September last he married Violet, daughter of Gen. Sir Richard Harrison, Inspector-General of Fortifications.

Lieut. Sidney F. Brooks died of enteric fever at Ladysmith on June 9. He was senior Lieut. of the 3rd V.B. East Surrey Regiment, with the temporary rank of Lieut. in the Army, and was serving with the Volunteer Company attached to the 2nd Batn.

2nd Lieut. John Frederick Pollok, 9th Lancers, died of wounds at Bappisfontein on the 2nd inst. Born Sept. 19, 1876, third son of the late John Pollok, J.P., D.L., of Lismany, co. Galway, and of Ronachan, Ayrshire, he joined the regiment as 2nd Lieut. Jan. 4, 1899.

2nd Lieut. the Hon. Charles William Hugh Cavendish, 17th Lancers, was killed in action in the fighting near Pretoria on Monday. He was the elder son of Col. Lord Chesham, Bucks Yeomanry Cavalry, serving with the Imperial Yeomanry in the field, by Lady Beatrice Constance Grosvenor, daughter of the first Duke of Westminster. Born Sept. 13, 1878, he was educated at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and was a 2nd Lieut. in the Royal Bucks Hussars Yeomanry from 1895 to 1898. He was gazetted a 2nd Lieut. in the 17th Lancers on Aug. 3, 1898.

2nd Lieut. Ralph Forrester, 1st Batn. East Lancashire Regiment, died at Kroonstad on the 6th inst. of enteric fever. Born July 22, 1877, he joined the East Lancashire Regiment Jan. 18, 1899, from the 4th Batn. East Surrey Regiment. He was second son of Mr. F. W. Forrester, of London and Oporto.

2nd Lieut. B. J. Horley, 4th Batn. Sherwood Foresters, was killed in action at Roodeval, Orange River Colony, on the 7th inst. He received his commission Dec. 15 last.

Among the members of the Duke of Cambridge's Own, Imperial Yeomanry, killed in the engagement at Lindley on May 31 was Mr. William T. Power, younger son of Sir William Tyrone Power, K.C.B., at one time Director of Supplies and Transport at the War Office. Mr. Power was educated at Cambridge, and was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1887. He was 36 years of age. Other members of the Imperial Yeomanry who fell at Lindley were Thomas Roland Backhouse, son of the late Mr. Thomas Backhouse, of Holdgate, Yorkshire, and Trevear, Penzance, and Hubert De Laune, third son of the late Mr. C. De L. Faunce De Laune, of Sharsted Court, Sittingbourne. Mr. De Laune was 25 years of age. One of the troopers of the Middlesex Company of the Imperial Yeomanry, who was killed in the action at Senekal on May 25, was Henry Selby Deane, the eldest son of Col. Deane, of the 13th Bengal Lancers. He was 22 years of age.

AFRICAN INCIDENTS.

The mutiny of the Uganda Rifles and the murder of Major Thruston make a dark page in the history of our recent operations in Africa. The gallant officer was done to death while fearlessly attempting to subdue the rising, which threatened grave consequences. He was a man of singular qualities, and has left behind him, in African Incidents; Personal Experiences in Egypt and Unyoro (Murray), an outspoken record of the ideas of a thoughtful man of action, which is informed with a certain cynicism quite characteristic of the lamented officer. His brother, who contributes a memoir to the volume, says that Major Thruston disclosed a vein of quiet wit even as a child, which was ironical but never malicious. He had a deep leaning to the East, and was profoundly impressed with the religions and philosophy of India, and took a somewhat melancholy view of life, having little patience with the conventions of society. This side of his character did not prevent him from being an ardent sportsman and a soldier of conspicuous energy, ability, and originality. After being gazetted to the Oxfordshire Light Infantry, he was appointed in 1890 to the Egyptian Army, and his book gives a very bright and interesting account of garrison duty at Assouan, and of the forced march from Kenah to Kossier. In May, 1893, Thruston returned home, but in the August of the same year he was appointed to the Uganda Commission under Sir Henry Colville. The narrative which he has left behind gives an admirable picture of the operation, but scarcely records the good work which he did in preventing the ravages of Kabarega. The somewhat cynical view which he appeared to take of his operations in the Unyoro expedition is marked by his describing it as a "chasse aux nègres." This was a name given to African war by a French father, and honesty compelled Major Thruston to adopt it as an accurate definition. There was a treaty with Germany defining the limits of our sphere, but neither the French Republic nor the Congo Free State recognised it as binding on themselves, and it was known that columns under Colonel Montell and Captain von Kerkhoven were moving towards the Nile. It was necessary for Col. Colville to discover what was going on, but between Uganda and the Nile lay Kabarega's state of Unyoro. Fortune came to our aid, says Major Thruston. There were good reasons for punishing Kabarega. The expedition was successful, and Kabarega's town was captured after a good deal of hard work, though at first we did not strike quickly enough. Major Thruston had under him a force of 600 Regular and 60 irregular soldiers, with which he was to guard the road between Uganda and the Lake. After the occupation of Unyoro Major Thruston came home, but on the day after his arrival he began to think the advantages of a residence in England somewhat over-rated. The climate was vile, the natives were Yahoos, dirty in their persons, and rude in their manners, and the restrictions were tedious, artificial, and insufferable. Accordingly, he was soon on active service again, and took a part of some importance in the Dongola operations. His final reflection upon the war was that the eager soldiers who had taken part in it had been impelled thereto mostly by vanity, and he himself, sitting on a camel in the desert, experienced an indescribable joie de vivre mixed with what he calls the joie de mourir. It was the pride of going where many wished to go, but few could go, and of doing things that others could do. After these experiences Major Thruston went again to Uganda, and never returned. The situation there was eminently unsatisfactory, and the Uganda Rifles, moved by smouldering discontent, mutinied. The peril to Uganda was great, and Major Thruston, who was commandant of the force, endeavoured to induce the men to return to their duties at Fort Lubwa's. On October 19, 1897, at the early age of 32, he died bravely in his single-handed endeavour, and the loss of the gallant officer was greatly felt by his comrades of the Oxfordshire Light Infantry. Sir Archibald Hunter, who has contributed an introduction to the book, says of the real Thruston, that he was a man of great courage, quick decision, and a first-class horseman and camel rider, chivalric, fearless, gifted with physical endurance and with tact and sympathy—in short a good and bold leader and an accomplished man, whose merits were partly concealed under a cloak of clever pessimism. He certainly wrote with admirable spirit, and few recent books deserve better to be read than his African Incidents.

TWO BOOKS ON HORSES.

Capt. Hayes is a well-known authority on horses as trainer, owner, and rider of them on the flat and over country, and he has added two other volumes to many which he has written on horses and equitation. Among Horses in South Africa (Everett & Co), is a discursive volume, full of the results of keen observation of all that concerns horses in South Africa. The Cape horse of 40 or 50 years ago, says Capt. Hayes, was a strong serviceable animal, now as extinct as the quagga, and his place is taken by a weedy slave, sound and hard working, but deficient in spirit and strength. It is greatly to the credit of the farmers that they endeavour to improve the breed of horses, and it must be confessed that the South African horse, at least, is good for work in that country. Indeed, Capt. Hayes himself says that they are admirable workers for their weight, and pull gamely up hill and down, over bad ground, having only for their food Indian corn, oat hay, and the veldt grass. At the present time a book like this is particularly interesting.

The other volume by Capt. Hayes is Among Horses in Russia (same publishers). He has made several professional visits to Russia, and after demonstrating his method of horsebreaking before the Grand Duke Nicholas, he visited many of the Russian establishments, afterwards took out horses to St. Petersburg, and received an official appointment from the Minister of War, with an allowance for expenses, to visit the Russian remount depot at Shandrovka in the south. At a later date he was appointed to visit various establishments to teach his method of catching and breaking-in young horses. How he fared in this commission is recounted in the book, which is full of information concerning Russian horses and the system of remounts and equitation in the Russian army.

SHORT NOTICES.

Mr. Blackburn's Game at Chess, edited by P. Anderson Graham (Longmans & Co.), contains a collection of the best games of a very brilliant player; and has already been very popular among those devoted to the game, because it is far pleasanter to learn chess in this way than by the old system of analysis.

Capt. C. J. Morse's Concise Instruction in Advanced Rear and Flank Guards, originally published as separate cards for practical instruction and easy reference, now appears in a small pocket volume (Forster Groom & Co.), and is a very useful digest of the drill books in relation to its special subject, including escorts for guns, outposts, reconnoitring, and the attack.

Messrs. Methuen have published a sixpenny reprint of Gen. Baden-Powell's Matabele Campaign—a very well-known book—and the new issue is certain to have very wide popularity. The many illustrations are from the gallant author's own hand.

Mrs. Oliphant's Life and Times of Queen Victoria is being issued as a sixpenny serial by Messrs. Cassell. When the book was first published it was at once accepted as presenting a very satisfactory picture from a sympathetic hand of Her Majesty's life, and many thousands of her subjects should be glad to possess it in this form.

The sixpenny novel is having a wide vogue, and it is truly astonishing how many good things can be had at the price. Messrs. F. V. White & Co. are issuing in good style John Strange Winter's novels, of which The Truth-tellers, Beautiful Jim, and Army Society have been issued, while Garrison Gossip is on the point of coming out. John Strange Winter has certainly hit the public taste, and no doubt her books in this form will sell very well.

LORDS AND COMMONS AT THE FRONT.

A Parliamentary return shows "the names of members of either House of Parliament at present serving, or under orders to serve, Her Majesty in South Africa, and the capacity in which they serve." From this it appears that there have been 36 Peers serving at the seat of war, of whom one, the Marquess of Winchester, was killed at Magersfontein on Dec. 11. The last Peer to leave England was Lord Zouche, Lieutenant in Imperial Yeomanry. There are also 27 members of the House of Commons engaged in the war. The latest to start for South Africa were the Hon. A. B. Bathurst and Major Duncombe.

The full list is:—

THE SUBMARINE BOGEY.

THE advocates of the submarine boat have scored a distinct advantage in the article on the subject which the Chief Constructor of the United States Navy has written for the Engineering Magazine. The editors of that magazine append to Admiral Hichborn's paper a note, in which they say "the perfection of the submarine boat has a double interest . . . as a triumph in the adaptation of mechanical transport, and as a revolutionising influence in naval tactics and strategy." How far they can claim accuracy in speaking of "the perfection" of the submarine boat is problematical. Admiral Hichborn, although he entitles his paper "The Demonstrated Success of the Submarine Boat," admits that such success is of a very qualified nature. The conclusion he arrives at is that "submarines can secure our coasts more perfectly than they can be secured in any other way at present practicable." It is clear, therefore, that the Chief Constructor of the United States Navy does not contemplate the use of "submarines" except as a defensive factor for the protection of harbours. So far from being in agreement with those on this side who would force upon us an expenditure for this class of craft, we take it that if Admiral Hichborn had been an adviser to the British Government instead of to the Government of the United States, he would be found opposing the provision of boats of the kind. The larger part of his paper consists of a summary of the past history and development of the "submarines," and in the second part he describes the conditions as at present existing, discussing the capacity of these vessels for performing work. Believing the "submarines" to be capable of undertaking certain duties he finally considers the part which they might play in war. Admiral Hichborn's historical summary touches only on those salient points which seem to be illustrative of progress and development, and it is in the final pages one finds so much likely to give rise to discussion and polemics. The Admiral defines the following as qualities necessary to the "submarine":—
The speed should be as great as that of the fastest torpedo boat. The radius of action should be very great. There should be a means of directing the course by vision upon a moving object while the boat remains invisible herself. Habitability and comparative comfort for considerable periods of time should be assured. Unlimited quantities of air for power and for respiration by the crew should be provided. Here are five qualities about the necessity of possessing which there is not likely to be dispute, yet this is what Admiral Hichborn says in regard to them: "These are not attainable at present, and there is no prospect that they will be until some entirely new and most efficient way of acquiring power be discovered, and until some startling discoveries in chemistry be made." It will be obvious to every unbiassed person who reads this admission that the demonstrated success which is the subject of the Chief Constructor's article is very qualified indeed.

The Holland boat, which Admiral Hichborn considers to be "undoubtedly the most advanced example" of her class, is deficient in every one of the above important qualities, but this fact does not deter the Admiral from arriving at a conclusion as to the utility of the type which is favourable. To reach this he assigns comparative values to the tactical elements as established by the Holland in this way. The theoretical radius of action on the surface of the Holland by means of her gas motor is 1,500 miles. This he considers satisfactory. But the surface speed of ten knots, and the submerged speed of seven knots for a fifty miles radius of action, are deemed unsatisfactory. The Admiral, however, accepts the surface speed as sufficient in the circumstances, because it is probably, he says, as much as can be got without increasing the length of the boat; while running on the surface is only to take place when the boat is proceeding to the field of action and out of the zone of a battleship's gun-fire. Whether it will be sufficient when the boat is chased by destroyers with three times her speed, he does not attempt to guess. "Control and direction in the vertical plane" the Admiral considers to be perfectly satisfactory, and similarly he is perfectly satisfied with "control and direction in the horizontal plane when the boat is running on the surface." But he admits that "control and direction" is entirely unsatisfactory when the boat is submerged, since the object to be steered for cannot be seen. Nevertheless he is ready to overlook this defect, because, he says, the boat in these circumstances is no worse than a ship in a fog or on a dark night. Ventilation he considers satisfactory, but habitability the reverse. However, here again Admiral Hichborn accepts the inevitable, as he considers the boat to be sufficiently habitable for a few days at a time, and because the crew can always be dry and warm, and will not suffer from heat.

The Admiral concludes his estimate by saying that, to his mind, "the algebraic sum of the positive and negative efficiency of the salient and determining features of the Holland type of submarines in its present development is a large positive quantity, and there seems to be no way of largely increasing it for some years." Here are the elements of positive and negative efficiency in tabulated form:—

SATISFACTORY.	UNSATISFACTORY.
Surface radius of action.	Surface speed.
Control and direction in the vertical plane.	Submerged speed.
And in the horizontal plane for surface work.	Submerged radius of action.
Ventilation.	Control and direction when submerged.
Armament?	Field of vision.
Protection?	Habitability.
Sea-going qualities.	Submerged motive power.
Surface motive power.

As the values of the armament and protection are mere guess work, we are not convinced of that "large positive quantity" of which the Admiral speaks.

It must be remembered in this connection that Admiral Hichborn is not a naval officer, but a naval architect, and therefore, while competent to deal with the elements of design, his authority upon the tactical or strategical value of any weapon has not the same weight. Take, for example, the question of armament, which he holds to be satisfactory, "since it consists of torpedoes that can be delivered with accuracy fully as great as, if not greater, than can the same missile from other types of craft." We find it difficult to follow Admiral Hichborn to this conclusion, since he has already pointed out that the field of vision when submerged is nil, and how then can he hope for similar accuracy as in a vessel from which the target is in sight? Again, he speaks of the protection as being perfect, "since neither gun fire nor torpedoes can reach her when submerged." The point is one probably best settled by experiment, but we would back any two of our destroyers to demonstrate the vulnerability of the Holland's protection in less time than it would take her to travel a hundredth part of her theoretical radius of action. We cannot forget what Captain Mahan has told us in his work upon the lessons of the war as to the influence of a political character which is felt by all public servants in the United States. It is possible that Admiral Hichborn feels this influence, and that it is responsible for the dictum that "the securing of our coasts so that our fleet may be free to do its legitimate offensive work is most assuredly a most important duty . . . the provision of a number of submarines would give a proportionate amount of coast security, since their presence would result either in the absence of hostile ships, or in the giving to us a chance to oppose our small boat with its small crew to a large ship with a large crew, with the chances of war in favour of the boat." We cannot think that the Admiral has made out his case either in regard to the satisfactory nature of the boat, or of her use, but in any case the same conditions do not rule for us as for the United States. We are inclined to believe also that the Narwal has proved herself a better boat than the Holland. But, as we have said before, it is the duty of the authorities in this country to find an answer to the "submarine," and everything points to the fact that such an answer will not be found in a boat to operate under water.

THE GERMAN NAVY LAW.

THE German Navy Bill has at last passed the Reichstag after a desultory discussion. The Government has secured its purpose, and has every reason to be gratified with the result. A very large increase was proposed—nothing less than the doubling of the squadrons—and, except in regard to ships for foreign service, no effectual opposition has been raised. The measure, as finally adopted, differs in certain respects from that originally presented by the Government. It was intended to be supplementary to the Navy Law of April 10, 1898, but instead of this, it embodies the complete naval programme, and entirely supersedes the Act of 1898. This change, however, is merely a matter of form, not affecting the purpose of the Act. When the ship-building programme has been carried out, there are to be two double squadrons, each consisting of a flagship and sixteen battleships, with eight large and twenty-four small cruisers for service with the squadrons. It was intended that there should also be eight large and fifteen small cruisers for foreign service, but the Government has agreed to provide for three only of the first class and ten of the second. In addition there is to be a reserve of four battleships, with three large and four small cruisers, instead of four of the former and six of the latter, as was originally proposed, these reserve cruisers being intended for foreign service.

In consenting to this change Admiral Tirpitz, the Naval Secretary of State, told the Reichstag that an increase of ships on foreign stations was immediately necessary, but that such an increase would not be made until 1906, because it was impossible to complete urgent and adequate preparation in home waters before that time. Herr Bebel, the Socialist leader, taunted the Centre Party, which has supported the Government, by forecasting that by 1906 they will have made up their minds to consent to the wishes of the Government in regard to ships for foreign service, as now for the squadrons in home waters. It was stipulated by a final paragraph which has been introduced into the Act that the money required for the additional expenditure shall be raised in a particular manner, in accordance with the views of the Centre Party, and accordingly the Reichstag has had before it two bills, one for an increase of the stamp duties upon lottery tickets and Stock Exchange securities; the other for considerably increasing the import duties upon foreign beer, champagne, and spirits. Both of these Bills have passed the Reichstag.

In the "Naval Annual" will be found a translation of the explanatory memorandum which accompanied the new Navy Bill as originally presented. It is a document of great political and naval significance, which begins by laying down the principle that the security of German commerce and of the economical development of the Empire demands peace at sea as much as on land, "not, however, peace at any price, but peace with honour." The document then proceeds to point out the probably extended character of a commercial war, and dwells upon the advantages which would fall to a superior rival through prolonging operations. We are next told that a disaster of this kind would set up most calamitous conditions in German economics and society. The contention is then put forward, which has now received the sanction of the Legislature, that the Navy Act of 1898 is insufficient, and a very significant phrase occurs in the third part of this remarkable memorandum. "The Federal Governments consider that an increase of the Navy will only be able to accomplish the intended purpose, viz.: securing peace even if confronted with the mightiest Naval Power, provided that it is carried out to the full measure in which it is projected." It is this conclusion that led the Government to insist upon the increase of the Navy being carried out under the authority of a naval law extending over a period of years. As a matter of fact, it is not thought that the ships to be built under the new Act, including those which are substitutes for others to be disrated on account of age, will be completed until the year 1920; but in 1906, or thereabout, if not before, a measure will doubtless be introduced for the building of those ships for foreign service which have been excluded from the present measure.

Naval Notes.

It is a pity that the "Service Members Committee" should have laid themselves open to the sarcastic criticism of "R. N." and others by their ridiculous suggestions and mischievous interference with the Navy. "Army reformers as inept strategists" they are stigmatised by "R. N.," and another writer dubs them "doctrinaires, faddists, or worse." Some weeks ago we pointed out that this self-styled "Service Members Committee" was incompetent to deal with naval matters, but we did not expect that they would so speedily demonstrate the accuracy of our remarks as they have in the "Memorandum on Army Reform." If the other suggestions of the committee have no greater value than that in section 7, then we are afraid their well intentioned efforts are not likely to have any satisfactory results. The particular recommendation which is to bring about an improvement in our military system reads thus: "The relief of the Army from the duty of garrisoning what are purely naval ports and coaling stations abroad is a matter for special consideration." This is in effect a reproduction of Sir John Colomb's scheme for improving the prospects of the senior officers of the Marine corps, which was tried with such disastrous results at Esquimalt. From the national point of view, there is not a word to be said in its favour, nor do we see how it would, if adopted, add to the efficiency of the Army. While we are altogether in favour of any plan which will increase the opportunities of employment of the senior officers of the Marine corps, it stands to reason that such a plan must not be detrimental to the national interests. As "R. N." respectfully recommends, the Service members will do well to study naval history, and to regard the defence of the Empire from a wider and higher standpoint.

Lord Nelson's celebrated communication from his flag-ship at the "Mouth of the Nile," in August, 1798, to Earl Spencer, First Lord of the Admiralty, containing the ever-memorable assertion, "Was I to die at this moment, 'want of frigates' would be found stamped on my heart," was sold with the Peel heirlooms on Tuesday last.

The Parliamentary paper on last year's naval manoeuvres was issued this week, and while it may have its use as a record there is nothing in it that was not already known. The document as usual contains a recapitulation of the general orders and instructions and various matters of that sort, but a much more intelligible and altogether more instructive report is that which appears in the "Naval Annual." We note, indeed, one matter to which reference was indeed made at the time of the manoeuvres, but has not again been mentioned until now, when is it referred to in this Parliamentary paper. This is the difficulty which the umpires have experienced in settling claims because the officers in the smaller craft still persist in disguising their vessels by covering up their names or numbers. We gather from the report that the umpires are of opinion that stringent orders should be issued forbidding anything of the kind. If such orders are issued they will doubtless be obeyed, but surely there is something to be said on the other side, and in favour of permitting the exercise of ingenuity on the part of the officers in this connection. In some of the early manoeuvres there can be no doubt that attempts at disguise were made which were simply ridiculous. Unless we are mistaken the Belleisle was at one time posing as a collier, and some equally unmistakable ironclad of obsolete type pretended to be a Cunarder. This was excellent fooling and may have served to while away the hours of a tedious blockade, but it could serve no real purpose of instruction. On the other hand it may well be argued that to put a check upon the zeal of the torpedo boat officers, even when it displays itself in the shape of which the umpires complain, might have its disadvantages.

The centenary of the late Lieut. Thomas Waghorn, Indian Navy, is to be celebrated on Wednesday next by a dinner at the Hotel Cecil. He died fifty years ago, and it was not until 1884 that his countrymen remembered what he had done for them in particular and the world generally. France, however, previously recorded her appreciation of the great pioneer of the Overland route by placing on the western side of the Suez entrance of the Canal a large bust of the deceased officer. Waghorn was originally a midshipman in the Royal Navy, but, like many others of that rank, was cast adrift after the war with France ended. But for his energy and determination the Suez route would not have been developed for many years, and then probably not by an Englishman.

Mr. Thomas Read, whose name is associated with the protection of British agriculture, urges the Admiralty to plan the coming manoeuvres in such a manner as to test the liability of our merchant ships to capture by the enemy. There is no doubt that such a scheme of naval manoeuvres would be highly instructive and valuable, were it possible to plan them on a very large scale, and, at the same time to gain the co-operation of our mercantile marine. This latter is an indispensable condition, because, unless the masters of steamers knew that a mimic war was in progress they would have no object in trying to evade capture. There are obvious difficulties in the way of planning such manoeuvres, but they need not be regarded as insuperable, since our shipping companies are as much interested in the liability of their vessels to capture or destruction in war as the working man who likes to purchase his half-quarter loaf for 2½d. It is to be hoped, indeed, that the Admiralty will some day attempt this experiment. In previous years some attempt has been made to capture unsuspecting steamers bound up Channel, but the results were purely farcical, owing to the ignorance of the prey of what was happening.

Letters received from the Mediterranean squadron give details of a mishap which occurred during the manoeuvres on the night of May 29. The Canopus and Vulcan were hidden behind an island, with all lights extinguished, and the rest of the cruisers, gunboats, and destroyers were sent in search of them. The weather became thick and a strong wind blew, and the search therefore failed. About one o'clock in the morning the Hebe ran ashore. The Vulcan tried to tow her off, but was unsuccessful, and it was found necessary to lighten her before another attempt was made. Eventually, however, the gunboat was floated, and she has been sent to Malta to be docked.

It is rumoured that the British squadron on the North American station will visit New York this summer. According to the New York Herald, a correspondent of that paper called on Sir Frederick Bedford in Halifax and asked the Admiral if any portion of his squadron would visit Bar Harbour. Sir Frederick is said to have replied that the matter was under consideration, and that he would make the visit if he could arrange the dates. He proposed to take with him the Orcesent, the Tribune, the Indefatigable, and the Quail. The reporter also asked the Admiral if he would extend his visit to New York. "I would like to," replied Sir Frederick. We trust the Admiral will have his wish gratified, since there is every reason why the interchange of visits between representative squadrons of the British and American nations should take place far more frequently than it does. There was a time when the fear of losing men by desertion kept our ships out of American ports and United States vessels from coming to ours, but the inducements which offered at that time are neither so promising or so attractive as they used to be, and in any case the loss of a few men is as nothing to the benefits which result from such visits.

While Sir Edward Seymour is forcing his way to Pekin, Mr. Brodrick's statement in the House of Commons on Thursday affords satisfactory evidence of the complete accord of the Powers. In spite of the destruction of the Pekin railway, the Admiral is expected to reach Pekin to-day. The little skirmish with the Marines has not been repeated, but there may be more fighting. Troops continue to pour into Taku, and the United States, as well as Japan, are participating in the alliance. Russia has landed 1,700 additional men, and the Terrible has embarked nearly another thousand of British troops at Hong Kong for Tien-tsin. The China squadron is unfortunately short of a battleship at the present critical period. The Victorious was withdrawn for the Mediterranean, and her successor, the Goliath, by a series of mishaps to her machinery, has been considerably delayed. The Argonaut, too, is still a "lame duck" at Chatham, when she should be in the Far East. Were the Glory ready she should be despatched at once, instead of waiting to take out Sir Edward's successor; but she will not be out of dockyard hands until next month.

Navv Personal.

The Duke of Edinburgh's visit to this country is indefinitely postponed. His Royal Highness has been recommended to remain at Herculesbad, Hungary, for further treatment.

The Duke of York left Balmoral on Sunday last, and reached St. James' the following day. On Monday he attended a special General Court at the Trinity House, and was unanimously re-elected Master of the Corporation for the ensuing year. His Royal Highness was at Ascot for the race week.

The Terrible's stall of the Naval and Military Bazaar at Olympia next week will be presided over by the Countess of Clanwilliam and the Ladies Mead, wife and daughters of our noble and gallantly distinguished Admiral of the Fleet.

Admiral of the Fleet the Hon. Sir Henry Keppel was at Ascot during the current week, and looked well after his long tropical tour to the Far East.

Admiral Lord Charles Scott, Commander-in-Chief at Devonport, attended with the Princess Henry of Battenberg on the occasion of Her Royal Highness laying the foundation stone of the Nurses' Home at the Royal Albert Hospital at that seaport on Saturday last.

Admiral the Hon. Sir E. R. Fremantle was at Vancouver Island last week on his way home from the Far East. The gallant admiral is of opinion that the intensity of feeling in Japan against Russian encroachments will precipitate war between the two nations. On Monday last it was stated in the daily papers that Sir Edmund was proceeding to Peking with a naval force. He was more likely at that time to have been travelling on the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Admiral Sir A. H. Hoskins takes the chair at the Royal United Service Institution on Wednesday next, when Mr. J. R. Thursfield reads a paper on the "Training of our Seamen." The importance of the subject should certainly secure the attendance of a large number of officers of the Service afloat.

Vice-Admiral Sir Harry Rawson is to have the Channel Squadron under his command ready for service by the 4th prox.

Vice-Admiral Sir Compton Domville was present on Tuesday last at the annual dinner of the Merchant Taylor's School, held in their hall on St. Barnabas' Day, and responded to the toast of the Royal Navy.

Rear-Admiral H. L. Pearson, Commander-in-Chief of the Australian Squadron, leaves Sydney to-day with the Royal Arthur for New Zealand. This is his last visit to the southern portion of the station before the expiration of his period in command.

Rear-Admiral Lord Charles Beresford last week successfully contested the sailing race in the launch of the Ramillies for the challenge cup presented to the Mediterranean Squadron by the Gibraltar Yacht Club. There were fifty competitors.

Commodore E. S. Poë, commanding the cruiser Training Squadron, arrived at Portsmouth in the St. George on Tuesday last. Captains R. K. McAlpine, of the Cambrian, parted company from the commodore the previous day off Plymouth, and entered the Sound that evening.

Captain E. P. Jones, of the Forte, commanding the Naval Brigade with Sir Redvers Buller's force in Northern Natal, is highly commended by that distinguished officer for the very smart manner in which the heavy guns of the brigade were brought into action on Sunday last when the troops concentrated on Klip River, at the junction with Gans Vlei stream.

Captain Charles Windham, of the Royal Yacht Osborne, leaves Portsmouth this evening for Flushing to embark H.H. the Khedive on a visit to Her Majesty.

Captain G. F. King-Hall, chief of the staff to the Commander-in-Chief of the Mediterranean Squadron, has, we regret to say, been obliged to return to England in consequence of ill-health, and arrived on Friday in last week from Gibraltar by the P. and O. steamship Caledonia.

Captain Anson Schomberg, of the Revenge, pays off that vessel at Chatham on the 22nd inst.

Captain E. J. Fleet, of the Edgar, places that cruiser out of commission at Devonport on Tuesday next.

Captain the Hon. Hedworth Lambton, having hauled down his pennant from the Powerful last week, has now been selected to stand for Newcastle in the Liberal interest at the next general election. On Wednesday next at the Naval and Military Bazaar, in Olympia, the Powerful's stall will be attended by some of the midshipmen recently serving under the gallant captain's command.

Captain F. O. Pike, of the Minerva, arrived at Plymouth on Friday in last week, with the Wye in tow, from Madeira, and left the next morning with the disabled storeship for Sheerness.

Commander Spencer de Horsey, of the Monarch, serving with the Naval Brigade attached to Lord Roberts's force, was, we are sorry to say, severely wounded in the foot prior to the entry into Pretoria, the ankle bone being broken.

Commander J. M. de Robeck, of the Pyramus, left Sheerness for the Mediterranean on Monday last, to replace the Polyphemus, paid off at Chatham on the 31st ult.

Lieut. G. F. Temple (retired) has been allowed by Her Majesty to accept and wear the Cross of Chevalier (1st class) of the Order of St. Olaf, conferred by the King of Sweden and Norway in recognition of his services in surveying the Norwegian coast. Lieut. Temple retired in 1873, a year after promotion to his present rank, and has since then devoted himself to science and literature.

Lieut. (Senior) H. W. James, of the Tartar, employed with the Naval Brigade in South Africa, has been invalided.

Lieut. C. J. Twistleton-Wykeham-Fiennes, who died on December 22 last while in command of the Boxer, at Malta, left estate valued at £20,236.

Lieut. A. G. Wright, of the Algerine, appears to have rendered important service on Saturday and Sunday last in ascertaining the practicability of transporting an armed force from Tien-tsin to Peking.

Lieut. J. B. O'Brien, invalided from the Empress of India, and Assistant-Engineer G. H. Elgar, from the Ocean, arrived in England on Friday in last week by the P. and O. steamer Caledonia.

Lieut. E. Stevenson, who commanded the Skate to Gibraltar, and placed her in reserve at that port, arrived home on Sunday last in the Orient steamship Ouzco.

General Sir Howard Jones and the officers of the Royal Marine Forces at their annual dinner last week, paid a very pleasing compliment to General Sir A. B. Stransham, the senior officer of the corps, in sending a telegram conveying the good wishes of those present. Sir Anthony joined the Infantry Division in 1823, and is now ninety-six years of age.

Major and Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel F. A. Newington, R.M.L.I., who retired in 1897, joins the newly formed 4th V.B. Royal West Kent Regiment as Major. He holds certificates in musketry (extra), gunnery, and torpedo, and has been awarded the Royal Humane Society's medal. The Auxiliary forces secure a valuable field officer, and it is to be regretted that other retired officers of his corps do not follow his example.

Captain R. H. Morgan, R.M.L.I., and Lieut. W. S. Poë, R.M.A., recently serving in South Africa, have been invalided, and are returning home in the transport Bavarian.

Lieut. C. H. Hood, R.M.L.I., who was attached to Colonel H. L. Smith-Dorrien in South Africa, is now officially appointed A.D.C. on that officer assuming command of a brigade with the local rank of Major-General.

Navy Foreign.

Some particulars have been announced concerning the French Naval Estimates for the year 1901, and, although the details have not been disclosed, it is known that the credits demanded will show a great increase upon those of the present year. The total outlay intended is 329,286,699 frs., being an increase of more than 17,000,000 frs. upon the votes of 1900. The augmentation appears to be spread over nearly every vote, and of course results from the larger ship-building programme which has been introduced.

That programme has been under discussion by the Naval Committee, and M. Le Moigne has just presented an exhaustive report upon it with some remarks upon the counter proposals and additional suggestions of M. Fleury-Ravarin, M. Lockroy, and Admiral Rieunier. The reporter begins by endeavouring to demonstrate that France has been content for a century to hold the second naval place, and he says that there is no longer any question as to our superiority; the only point is whether France can retain her present relative position. If she does not take care, he says, she will soon cease to be an effective naval power. In fact, her naval strength has fallen off compared with the other fleets of the world. Thus, in 1888, she had 39 armoured ships, and has now 39, whereas the figures for England are 56 and 72, for Russia 15 and 27, for Italy 10 and 13, for Germany 12 and 23, and for Japan 1 and 6; while the United States, which are not credited with having had any armoured ships in 1888, are now given 14. The same condition exists, says M. Le Moigne, in relation to protected cruisers and to the ships which are yet in the state of projects. He proceeds to discuss the types of ships, and arrives at the conclusion that a speed of 18 or 19 knots is enough for battleships, and that a displacement of 13,500 tons is a minimum. He thus gives his sanction to the proposals of the Government. In relation to the other ships, the Committee has rejected all proposals contrary to those of the Government, and in addition to the six battleships of 14,865 tons, approves of the building of five armoured cruisers of 12,600 tons. Large displacements have thus found favour, but at the same time M. le Moigne demands the construction of submarine boats according to the views of the Government, as the opportunity may arise under the sanction of experience.

The trials of wireless telegraphy are being continued at Toulon, where four complete stations have been installed with transmitters and receivers. Two of these are in the ships of the squadron, one on board the Utile, a harbour service boat, and the other at Fort St. Louis. This last has a mast 115ft. high, while that in the Utile is only 79ft. high. Communication has been established between the fort and the boat, the latter being behind the peninsula at the Colle Noire. These first trials have disclosed the fact that mountain masses are not opposed to the passage of the Hertzian waves, and the trials were fully successful, notwithstanding the inexperience of the telegraphist soldiers who were conducting the experiments. Trials are to take place also at Rochefort and Brest. The fact that wireless telegraphy could be conducted successfully across intervening masses of land was already known in this country, and has been more than once proved, as in the operations of the Reserve Squadron last year at Berehaven.

The Spanish cruiser Estramadura, recently launched at Cadiz, is the vessel built out of subscriptions made by the Spanish colonists in Mexico. Her displacement is 2,030 tons, length 290ft., beam 36ft., and draught 14ft. Her armour deck is composed of two layers of plates each an inch thick. She carries four Hontoria 5.6in. quick-firing guns, four Krupp 4.2in. quick-firing guns, four 2.2in. guns, and two machine guns, but no torpedo tubes. Her two engines are vertical and triple expansion, with eight Thornycroft boilers, developing 7,000 h.p., and giving her a speed of 20 knots. It is stated that the cruisers Alfonso XII., Alfonso XIII., Conde de Venadito, Isabel II., Marques de la Ensenada, Temerario, Martin Alonso Pinzon, Vincente Yañez Pinzon, Marquez de Molins, and General Valdez, and the torpedo boats Eulalia, Pilar, Condor, Aguila, Seguria, Cuervo, Tarifa, Retamosa, Rigel, Ejército, and Castor, as well as five old coast defence ships, will be sold out of the Service or be devoted to harbour service.

The long controversy in America concerning the supply of the armour of which the Navy stands in so much need seems to have reached a deadlock in which Congress takes a threatening stand toward the existing makers. Whatever the final action may be, the feeling, according to good authority, in that body undoubtedly is strong for an ultimatum. "Sell us armour on our terms or we will build a Government plant."

"The dominant feeling against the armour makers seems," says the Army and Navy Journal, "to be that they will become so overpoweringly wealthy that the government will be accused of fostering a dangerous class of millionaires. It is well known that until the recent rebuilding of the British Navy no other private maker in the world had enjoyed such large contracts for military material at good prices as Krupp, though French makers have nearly rivalled him. In addition to orders from his own government Krupp has made largely for many other nations and also has an immense business in commercial shapes of metal. His establishment now employs more than 40,000 workmen, and in the time of the elder Krupp about 30,000. With all this great business we believe his sworn income from the whole was less than our makers of armour plate are vaguely supposed to derive from that industry alone. This is not to be attributed to close economy on the part of the German government, for the comparison of costs in different countries submitted to Congress showed that Krupp received about the same prices as our makers."

The Revue du Cercle Militaire publishes the following particulars of some of the French submarine boats:—Gustave Zédé: Built of bronze; length, 160ft.; beam, 10ft. 7ins.; height, 10ft. 7ins.; displacement, 226 tons; one propeller driven by electricity from accumulators; greatest speed, 15 knots; armament, one torpedo tube in the bow. Morse: Built of bronze; length, 118½ft.; beam, 15½ft.; height, 9½ft.; displacement, 146 tons; one propeller driven by electricity from accumulators; greatest speed, 13 knots; armament, one torpedo tube; complement, one officer and eight men. Among others of the Morse type building in Cherbourg are the Français and the Algérien. The Français will be ready for its trials on August 15, and the Algérien on October 1. The greatest speed actually attained by the Morse on the surface, is 12.3 knots, with a buoyancy of about 2½ tons. The trials show that her radius of action on the surface at 5½ knots is 150 miles, and at 4.9 knots, 174 miles. She can be submerged in four minutes. It takes her, however, fourteen minutes to turn completely round, and the radius of gyration is 275 yards. Narval: Built of bronze; length, 112½ft.; beam, 12½ft.; draught aft, 5½ft.; displacement, 106 tons; one propeller, driven by a vertical engine, triple expansion, with multi-tubular boiler, developing 217 h.p.; speed, on the surface 12 knots, submerged 8 knots. This boat was laid down at Cherbourg on June 1, 1898, and was launched last October. She differs entirely from the Gymnote, Gustave Zédé, and Morse. She can be navigated in three positions, namely, resting on the surface; with hull submerged, only the dome and the funnel being visible; totally submerged, the funnel being shipped and all holes closed. In the first and second positions the propeller is driven by an oil engine; in the third by electricity furnished by accumulators. By making use of both her motors she can go 252 miles at 12 knots and 624 miles at 8 knots. Totally submerged, and using therefore her accumulators only, her distances are 25 miles at 8 knots and 70 miles at 5 knots. She carries four torpedo tubes. Her complement is one officer and nine men.

A NUMBER of invalids sent to Aldershot from South Africa have been allowed to go to their homes on sick furlough. Before going they have all expressed in eulogistic terms their satisfaction with the way in which they have been treated in hospital. They say everything possible was done to make them comfortable. This is very creditable to the local medical officers.

THE "TERRIBLE" AND BOER WARFARE.

A representative of the Times of Ceylon has made the following notes from a diary kept by one of the officers of the Terrible, in which the movements of the Naval Brigade were fully recorded:—

"We arrived at Simons Bay on Oct. 14, and although preparations were afoot to get the ordinary field guns and small arm men ready for landing, it soon became apparent to our captain that guns of longer range and greater power were needed. The Powerful arrived the same evening, and we were delighted to meet and have a yarn with some of the officers from our sister ship. Following up his idea Capt. Percy Scott gave orders to mount a long 12pr. as a field gun. On Saturday, Oct. 21, it was ready for trial, and, permission having been obtained, it was fired from our upper deck with most satisfactory results. Permission was then obtained to make more, and to carry out the work on shore, where there was more room. Attention was also turned to the building of shore mountings for our 4.7in. guns. These were designed on board and made, under our own supervision, by our own men, in the dockyard. In fact, two were completed, and a third was being made when the Powerful received orders for Durban. The details of how, in a bad south-easter, she coaled, and stored, and had gun mountings and guns put into her are interesting, but too long for narration. Anyway she sailed on Oct. 26, having on board two 4.7in. guns, with our platform mountings, and five of our 12pr. mountings, for each ship had been ordered to have two or four ready. A searchlight, with Capt. Scott's flasher, was also mounted by us for communicating with Kimberley. The first thing we heard was that, with a promptness and decision which undoubtedly saved not only Ladysmith but Natal, Capt. Lambton, on the day of his arrival, landed and took to Ladysmith two 4.7in. guns, three long 12prs., on our mountings, one short 12pr., some Maxims with 300 rounds per gun, and 286 officers and men. The change in the situation wrought by the timely bringing into action of these long-range guns is now ancient history, as well as the marked prudence with which their ammunition was husbanded, so that when Ladysmith was relieved some 18 rounds per gun still remained available.

"On Oct. 31, we landed every available carpenter and mechanic to hasten the making of fittings for sixteen 12prs., two platforms for 4.7in. guns and a wheeled 4.7in. mounting. On Nov. 2, we received orders for Durban, and at that time we had sixteen 12prs. and a wheeled 4.7in. mounting ready for service. The getting of the wheels in sufficient quantities was a difficulty, but by scouring the country as far as Cape Town we obtained them in time. The next day we sailed for Durban, sure that our guns would be acceptable, as already we began to hear on board of Boer raids south of the Tugela River, and of our military and volunteer guns being always outranged by the Boer guns.

"The Terrible arrived at Durban on Nov. 6. Lighters were alongside early, and we began hoisting out the 4.7in. and 12pr. guns, ammunition, stores, for it is not safe at Durban to put off till to-morrow what can possibly be done to-day. Capt. Scott landed at once, took over the duties of commandant at Durban, and very soon got a grasp of the situation, which was, briefly, that small parties of Boers were within 20 miles of Pietermaritzburg, and that we had not—now that Sir George White and his army were locked up in Ladysmith—enough troops to prevent their coming even down to Durban. By nightfall all the guns were ashore with a sufficient number of men to mount them as they were landed.

"On Nov. 7 plans for the defence of Durban were arranged and promulgated to the Thetis, Forte, Philomel, and Tartar, who were also there, and the commander landed to make detailed arrangements and select the actual gun positions. The next day, as soon as lighters were alongside, the men, fully equipped and dressed in khaki, were put into them and landed. With a huge string of horse, mule and ox waggons, they marched off and took up their position for the defence of Durban. The Terrible had landed one 4.7in. quick-firing gun on wheeled mounting; 16 long 12prs. on special mountings; two short 12prs. on ordinary field mountings; two Maxims on ordinary field mountings; making 21 guns, each with 300 rounds of ammunition; 21 officers and 250 men, besides the commandant and his staff. The Forte landed three officers and 85 men, one 9pr. field gun, and two Maxims; the Thetis, three officers and 55 men to man the 6in. guns of Bluff Fort; the Philomel, one 7pr. field gun, two Nordenfeldt machine guns, three officers and 44 men; and the Tartar, two 3pr. quick-firing guns in armoured train, one officer and 13 men. The general scheme of defence was as follows:—To the northward, one 4.7in. and six 12prs. were placed on the Beira ridge, commanding all the main roads and approaches; to the eastward, six 12prs. on the Beira ridge, commanding the Umgeni bridge and the valley of Umgeni; one 9pr. and two Maxims, commanding the Umgeni Valley and flanking the approach; on the high ground west of Umgeni bridge, one 7pr. and two Nordenfeldts, commanding bridge and approaches from the eastward, to the westward; six 12prs., commanding the railway and open country west of Claremont; two 6in. guns commanding the whole of the approaches to Durban south of the Beira bridge. The armoured trains, with two 3prs., patrolled from Umgeni to the east of Claremont or beyond on the west, and besides this the Forte and Thetis were anchored so as to specially command the Umgeni Valley and the eastern approaches; and the Terrible commanded the western approaches. Arrangements were also made for 300 seamen to be ready to land, barricade and hold the streets if necessary. Col. Bethune undertook the patrolling and scouting of the surrounding country with his mounted men. It was decided to hold only the main waterworks at Umlans and to protect the conduits. Fifty Marines and two 12prs. were detailed for this duty, under the command of Capt. Mullins, of the Terrible. They were placed on high ground commanding the Umlans waterworks and approaches. Local rifle associations held themselves in readiness in case of necessity. Arrangements were made for transferring valuables from the various banks to the Terrible, as well as the colonial archives from Maritzburg at an hour's notice should the necessity arise. The commandant might well have reviewed his work with the confidence that Durban at all events was efficiently held. The guns were not allowed to remain idle. We practised moving about at unexpected times, and without any animal transport, so as to be able to reinforce any point with the least delay. The people of Durban were kindness itself to the sailors in their little bell-tented camps.

"When the Boers made their way towards Colenso, the Terrible's 12prs. began to be taken, two at a time, and pushed up to the front and manned by the Philomel. These went to Maritzburg to replace Lieut. James, of the Tartar, who with two of the long 12prs. left behind by the Powerful, had been sent on to the Mooi river. On Nov. 23, the officers and men of the Fort were ordered to take two more of our 12prs. to Maritzburg, so that the four guns already sent forward might go to the Mooi river and Estcourt respectively. It seemed hard on the Terrible that again another ship should take her guns to the front—guns that she saw the necessity for, designed, mounted and landed. Still, after all, the great thing is to get the guns there. Another 4.7in. gun on wheeled mounting arrived on this date from Simons Bay, made on our design. Gen. Buller arrived on Nov. 24, and Capt. Scott showed him the two 4.7in. guns all ready to pop into the train. He explained that there were twelve 12prs. of long range also ready.

"Nov. 26.—Orders at last! The Terrible men to take two 4.7in. guns and four 12prs. up to Estcourt, under Commander Limpus, of the Terrible. The other officers of the Terrible were Lieut. England, Mr. Sherrin, Mr. Troupe, Mr. Hutchison, midshipmites; Mr. Cole, gunner; Mr. Roskrige, engineer; Dr. Lomus, Lieut. Richards, Wilde, and Messrs. Down and Ackland. All the guns at the front were to be under the command of Capt. Jones, of the Fort. We left at 7 a.m. amid much rejoicing and reached Estcourt on Monday morning. Leaving the guns in the train, we camped alongside the railway. On Nov. 29 we moved on to Frere. From here with our long glass we could see the Boer camps beyond Colenso and the Boers moving about.

"Dec. 1.—Capt. Scott contrived a searchlight, fitted with his flasher, and mounted it on a railway truck. The whole job was done in 24 hours. Gen. Buller arrived on Dec. 6, and at once wired for eight more of our 12prs., but did not think he would need any more 4.7in. guns, though he quite understood they only wanted asking for.

"Dec. 8.—Eight more guns arrived, and there were now at the front two 4.7in. and 12 12prs., manned by the Terrible; two 12prs. manned by the Tartar; at Estcourt there were two 12prs. manned by the Philomel; and at the Mooi River, two 12prs. manned by the Fort.

"On Dec. 12 we inspanned and moved to Chieveley with two 4.7in. guns and six 12prs., under Lieut. Richards, Wilde and Burne. We topped the hills at daylight and made our way unmolested across the plain to our assigned position at Gun Hill, Chieveley. After pitching camp behind the hill and giving the men something to eat, we were told to let them rest. The next day at 7.10 a.m. we opened fire on the earthworks and camps at Hlangwani Hill, but there was absolutely no reply. On the 14th, we shifted to Shooter's Hill and opened fire at a better range, 2,500 yards nearer. Again there was absolutely no reply. We continued firing at intervals whenever the Boers showed themselves at work in their trenches. The rest of the force came out from Frere during the day. At dusk we received our orders for the next day.

ARMY REFORM.

A scheme of Army reform has been forwarded to Lord Salisbury by the Service members of the House of Commons. They state that the mobilisation of the units of the largest army hitherto embarked by this country had in the main been quickly and satisfactorily carried out, but it was impossible to disregard the evidence that grave defects in the organisation, preparation, and training of the Army had become apparent through the test of the war. The army as first constituted was wanting in due proportion of the three arms, being deficient in cavalry and in artillery for the work it had to perform. It was wanting in mobility in consequence of imperfect organisation of the transport, ammunition trains, and services. The system of military training of commanders, staffs, and units had not been in accordance with the requirements of modern warfare, and the army was sent to make a campaign which had not been prepared for with sufficient foresight and judgment. To ensure the safety of the Empire it would be necessary, when the war was ended, to remove, by reforms of our military system, the defects which the war had disclosed. In view of the frequent demands on the military resources of the United Kingdom, caused by the exigencies of our Imperial position, an adequate proportion of the Army should be kept organised as a force complete in itself and maintained in constant readiness for immediate service, without calling on any of our Reserves except Section A. The rest of the field army at home whatever be its numbers voted by Parliament, should be as efficient in organisation, preparation, armament and training as any force of like numbers which any other nation could place in the field. With regard to the field army, it was necessary to recognise that while certain portions of a modern army could be rapidly augmented from auxiliary forces, the making others, such as mobile artillery, cavalry, and transport efficient for war, required far more time and presented greater difficulties. The forces maintained for home defence and emergency must, in addition to the above, and to the troops required for garrisons, provide an organised force duly proportioned in all arms and provided with cadres of transport, ammunition trains, and services ready to be filled up in time of need to complete the force and render it mobile in the field. The relief of the Army from the duty of garrisoning what were purely naval ports and coaling stations abroad was a matter for special consideration. The principles suggested for adoption are:—

1. The Secretary of State for War to be responsible to the nation that the Commander-in-Chief and Financial Secretary respectively perform their duties, deciding questions on which they differ, dealing with the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and harmonising the preparations of the Commander-in-Chief with the general policy of the country, the Secretary of State to be responsible to the House of Commons that the Army Estimates be neither too large nor too small for the military requirements of the country.

2. The Commander-in-Chief to be responsible to the Secretary of State for the organisation and efficiency of the Army, its preparation for war, and for the sufficiency and effectiveness of its stores and armaments. The Commander-in-Chief shall from time to time submit to the Secretary of State a written report of the numbers, character, and distribution of the forces required for the military defence of the Empire.

3. The Financial Secretary to be responsible for financially reviewing and compiling the Army Estimates, and for the proper application of the sums granted, and he shall not be connected with any department of either supply or manufacture for the Army.

4. A greater degree of decentralisation than at present exists being desirable, it is possible that in carrying this out a readjustment of the military districts of the United Kingdom will become necessary.

5. The present system of training staff officers requires consideration and development. It might be well to appoint a general officer who would be responsible to the Commander-in-Chief, and who might be charged with the duty of periodically testing staff officers in the staff requirements necessary for field service, and reporting thereupon to the Commander-in-Chief. The principle of responsibility for the promotion of all regimental, departmental, and staff officers, and selections for command is of the greatest importance. This responsibility should rest with the Commander-in-Chief, after considering the recommendations of the Army Board.

6. While our Army is based on voluntary enlistment it is evident that terms of service must be adapted to the wants of those willing to enlist, and consequently be elastic enough to attract great numbers. Those willing annually to enlist in times of peace must, if possible, be led by the terms of service offered to divide themselves into the numbers needed for service abroad and for home requirements respectively, whilst providing the reserves necessary for war emergencies. The terms of service for those willing to serve abroad must be arranged so as to make the cost of reliefs as small as is compatible with efficiency. The terms of service with the colours for those wishing to serve at home may be shortened to the minimum that will make efficient soldiers, in order to increase the reserves to the utmost, provided that these short service soldiers maintain their efficiency by brief annual trainings in musketry and drill, so long as they form part of the first-class Army Reserve. When the total force necessary for service abroad and for home requirements is decided upon it should be possible, by a combination of short and long terms of service, to arrange those willing annually to enlist so as to meet those two great necessities of our regular Army.

THE NATIONAL BAZAAR.—The committees of the National Bazaar met on the 7th inst. at the Royal Palace Hotel, Kensington. It was reported that the total amount standing to the credit of the promoters was £27,000. This sum, however, is expected to be considerably increased, as the proceeds of the sales of coupons and badges have yet to come in. Five hundred thousand badges were struck, and if they have been all sold, there will be a profit of, approximately, £10,000; it is also possible for the coupons to add about £5,000 to the total. The expenses are estimated at between £1,500 and £2,000. The committees decided to ask her Majesty to accept a miniature of the national badge as a souvenir of the bazaar. Mr. C. Cox Hughes, the managing director of the Palace Hotel, was presented with a Louis XVI. silver-gilt mirror for the valuable help he had given to the committees.

EMPLOYMENT OF RESERVISTS.

The National Association for Employment of Reserve Soldiers held its 15th annual meeting at the R.U.S. Institution on the 8th inst., Lieut.-Gen. Sir W. Drysdale in the chair. The report stated that up to the date of the mobilisation of the Reserve forces there was a slight increase in the number of men for whom employment was found as compared with the corresponding period in the previous year. The number of men for whom employment had been found during the year was 4,780, a number which did not include men who had been employed by the War Office or those who had been provided with temporary employment. The committee had much satisfaction in stating that this year there had been again a considerable increase in the number of new firms which have applied to the association for men, amounting in the London office alone to nearly ninety. They had also received numerous letters from employers of Reservists announcing their intention of keeping the situations open of those men who had been called to join the colours for service in South Africa. The association has now 85 branches, all, with one or two exceptions, working satisfactorily. Employment offices had been opened under the War Office at Great Yarmouth, Leith Fort, Londonderry, and Scarborough, all of which had been affiliated to the association. The financial condition of the association continued satisfactory. The committee recorded their thanks for donations and subscriptions received, as in previous years, from her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, the Secretary of State for War, and from the profits of canteens of hired transports through the Adjutant-General. The reports also alluded to the loss which the organisation had sustained by the deaths of Field-Marshal Sir Donald Stewart and Col. Robert Bruce.

Gen. Sir E. Bulwer, in moving the adoption of the report, referred to the satisfactory circumstance that the number of Reservists for whom employment was found was increasing every year. The greatest credit was due to the working committee for the excellent results they had achieved. At present the work of the association was more or less at a standstill owing to the number of men who had been summoned to the colours, but as soon as the war was over and demobilisation took place the strain would be enormously increased. He thought he was not far wrong in saying that besides the old Reservists, most of whose places would be kept open for them, there would be 20,000 men looking for employment. He believed the country would be patriotic enough to give these men every help to settle in life after the way in which they had maintained the honour of their country.

Mr. George Arnold seconded the motion, and congratulated the association on having educated employers of labour and the general public to recognise the claims of Reservists. The report was adopted.

THE IMPERIAL DEFENCE ACT, 1888.—A Parliamentary paper has just been issued containing the accounts under the Imperial Defence Act, 1888, up to March 31 last. A total sum of £3,450,000 was issued from the Consolidated Fund between the financial years 1888-89 and 1895-96, of which £850,000 was for the Admiralty and £2,600,000 for the War Office. Of the £850,000 issued to the Admiralty, £797,779 14s. was raised by terminable annuities, and the remainder, £52,220 6s., was taken out of Exchequer balances in 1888-89, and replaced by the Admiralty out of Navy votes in 1890-91. Between 1890-91 and 1899-1900 enough of the £797,779 14s. had been repaid out of Navy votes to reduce the amount outstanding to £92,565 16s. To this repayment the Colonies contribute under Article VII. of the Australasian Agreement. The sum of £2,600,000 issued to the War Office has all been paid off, £150,000 having been paid out of the New Sinking Fund, 1894-95; £1,685,000 out of the New Sinking Fund, 1895-96; and £765,000 out of the Old Sinking Fund, 1894-95.

THE MILITARY SITUATION IN SOUTH AFRICA.

WHILE the storm-clouds in the far East grow daily more portentous the strife in South Africa would seem to be gradually approaching its end. The guarding of the railway through the Orange River Colony being still a matter of the first importance, pending the opening of the Johannesburg-Volksrust line, the 6th Batn. Royal Warwickshire Regiment has been sent forward to Bloemfontein, possibly replacing there a battalion detached to strengthen Sir Leslie Rundle's command between Senekal and Ficksburg. Since the stubbornly contested battle of the 11th and 12th inst. near Eerste Fabrieken to clear the enemy from the vicinity of the capital, Lord Roberts has remained inactive. The battle of the previous week, if not decisive in the sense of destroying the enemy's force, nor fully achieving its object, was highly instructive as a test of the capacity of the commander on either side. Commandant-General Botha, presuming too much on the apparently increasing reluctance of the British generals to hurl their men in frontal attacks on positions naturally strong, after the experiences of Colenso and Magersfontein, left his centre comparatively weak, in order to resist the out-flanking movements which he expected, and which actually took place. On the second day of the battle this fact became patent to Lord Roberts, whose wings were not making the progress he desired against the flanks—abnormally strengthened—of the enemy. He accordingly changed his tactics, and adopting on his right a frontal attack in concert with Ian Hamilton's flank movement, assaulted Diamond Hill, an exceedingly strong position and the key of the enemy's left centre. The attack was made by the 1st Batn. Royal Sussex and Derbyshire Regiments, and the City Imperial Volunteers, supported on the left by the Guards' Brigade. The fine advance of the men over difficult ground under heavy fire was specially remarked on by Lord Roberts. The storming of the hill was a gallant affair, and the Boers, feeling themselves practically surrounded, retired during the night. General Ian Hamilton was slightly wounded, but, happily, not incapacitated for duty. The death of the Earl of Airlie, which we have already recorded with regret, occurred during a charge of the 12th Lancers to extricate G Battery Royal Horse Artillery from a perilous forward position within comparatively short range of the enemy's rifles. He was shot, it is said, through the heart. On the 13th the British outposts were fifteen miles east of Pretoria, and the enemy were believed to have withdrawn to Middleburg seventy miles further from the capital. Mr. Kruger, whose movements are uncertain, is supposed to be at Alkmaar, forty miles south-east of Lydenburg and about seventy from the Portuguese frontier, in either of which directions he may retire. But between his present position and the frontier, the railway bridge at Malalane, near Hector Spruit, has been damaged, either by accident or design, and traffic temporarily interrupted.

The recent attacks on our communications have extended over a wider area, and have borne greater evidence of concerted action than was at first realised. Closely following the successful raid on the line at Roodeval, thirty-three miles north of Kroonstad, on the 7th inst., there came another attempt on the 14th at a point almost the same distance south of that town where the Zand River is crossed by the line. A force of 800 Boers with three guns attacked the British detachment posted there, but by the opportune arrival of reinforcements from Kroonstad the attempt was frustrated. Again, on the same date, the 14th, a raid was made on the reconstruction train at Leeuw Spruit, ten miles north of Roodeval, and resulted in a loss to the British of several killed and wounded, and between fifty and sixty made prisoners, Lord Kitchener himself having a narrow escape, it is said, in a correspondent's telegram, whilst sleeping in a railway carriage. The extreme points selected for these attacks being over 80 miles apart, the raiding commandoes must proceed from different centres of action, the attacks near the Rhenoster being, no doubt, made by Boers from beyond the Vaal, and that on the Zand by a force coming from the Bethlehem district, and passing by the north side of Senekal clear of General Rundle's chain of posts. On Tuesday, again, Lord Methuen, when escorting a convoy to Heilbron, was attacked by De Wet, who was beaten off with but small loss on the British side.

The military situation in the Orange River Colony demands the utmost vigilance of the British generals on whom has devolved the task of guarding the communications. Since the passage of General Buller's Army Corps through Botha's Pass and Laing's Nek, there has been an accession of strength from northern Natal to Mr. Steyn's commandoes. Believing that Sir Redvers is about to operate south towards Bethlehem, the Boer forces in that district are bearing with increasing pressure on the strategic line of Generals Rundle and Brabant, in order to force their cordon if possible, and by escaping to the south avoid being surrounded. Rundle on the 14th was at Scheeper's Nek, a day's march from Hammonia towards Senekal. On the 13th and 14th his outposts at Ficksburg were attacked. His patrols scour the country to prevent the enemy passing between his posts, but there may be some cause to doubt the sufficiency in numbers of his mounted troops to watch all points. On Saturday his headquarters returned to Hammonia as an attack in force on Ficksburg appeared imminent from the Boer main position north-east of the town. On Tuesday there was a lively encounter between Rundle's troops and the Boers, who sought to break through our lines, but were driven back by the smart action of a body of Yeomanry, supported by three guns. Rundle's position is evidently strong, and the garrisons at Thaba 'Nchu and Ladybrand having been reinforced, there is good reason to hope that he will continue to hold back the enemy, until the enveloping movements are completed.

On the 12th inst. Sir Redvers Buller's left wing was encamped north of Volksrust within the Transvaal frontier. General Clery with the central division was then passing through the defile of Laing's Nek, and the right under General Lyttelton was approaching Wakkerstroom. The left wing during its arduous turning movement by Botha's Pass had marched fifty miles, and engaged the enemy four times. It required rest, and the railway needed repair before a further advance could prudently be made. Sir Redvers accordingly on the 15th moved his headquarters back to Laing's Nek, to direct matters from a more central point. The enemy's forces on retiring from Natal are supposed to have divided, part going north towards Ermelo, and part along the Johannesburg railway towards Standerton. When his force passed into the Transvaal, Sir Redvers assigned to the Natal Volunteers the duty of guarding Dundee and the adjacent border, and expressed his high appreciation of the services rendered by them and their able commander, Brigadier-General Dartnell, throughout the operations ending with the enemy's expulsion from Natal. The conduct of the colonial corps has been deserving of the highest praise. Always eager for the fray, they have shared to the full the dangers of the war. In the fighting on the 10th inst. near Gans Vlei, the South African Horse with General Hildyard's command were in a tight place where they were greatly outnumbered, but they fought with magnificent coolness. Working round the Boer right, in a rugged defile, they were allowed to come to close quarters and suffered severely. They clung, however, to the ground they had reached until dark, and were the main cause of the enemy's retirement. As General Buller advances in the direction of Standerton, an attempt may be made by the Boer commandoes still moving about the Wakkerstroom district to turn the British right, and cut the railway between Laing's Nek and Newcastle, or even further to the south. On this account General Hildyard marched his division from Volksrust to Wakkerstroom on Saturday, but, having received the submission of many of the burghers, including the Town Guard, he returned on Tuesday to Volksrust, whence an advance had become imminent, as the damaged tunnel at Laing's Nek had been repaired, and the first train had passed through on Monday. On Wednesday the forward movement began, and Sir Redvers' headquarters were established at a point north of Sandspruit on the railway. On Thursday Paarde Kop was occupied without opposition. The important movements now taking place all tend—it is to be hoped—to the early extinguishing of the opposition, still strong and active, in the Bethlehem-Ficksburg district. General Hunter on Monday occupied Krugersdorp, a place almost held sacred by the Boers, and should before this have reached Johannesburg, whence his next objective will probably be Heidelberg, while Sir Redvers Buller moves up the railway to Standerton. An early descent from Standerton on Vrede may therefore be looked for, thus tightening the grip on the fighting burghers at Ficksburg, and on the Rhenoster River. In a telegram from Lord Roberts sent off yesterday at 8.30 a.m., and issued from the War Office during the afternoon, it is stated that General Baden-Powell occupied Rustenburg on the 14th. On Monday he joined Lord Roberts at Pretoria, having received many submissions, and taken 1,000 rifles since he left Zeerust. He reported from Rustenburg yesterday that he had found the leading Boers very pacific and cordial, and that Commandant Steyn and two field cornets had been captured during his absence. Ian Hamilton's column reached Springs on Thursday, en route to Heidelberg, where it will join hands with Buller's troops, who entered Paardekop the same day. It is hoped that they will reach Standerton to-day, "thus opening communication between Pretoria and Natal, and preventing any joint action between the Transvaalers and people of the Orange River Colony." Sir Frederick Carrington is expected shortly to make a forward movement across the northern border of the Transvaal.

Army Notes.

If the Memorandum addressed by the Service Members' Committee to the Prime Minister on the subject of Army Reform is not a perfect document, it at least has the merit of being clear and distinct. It is properly admitted that the War Office has done its work well, so far as the actual despatch of the field army to South Africa is concerned. That is a fact which none could fairly dispute. That faults of system have been brought to light was only to be expected, seeing that the campaign has tested our existing arrangements to the utmost. It has to be remembered that had our resources been twice what they are many details would, on experiment, still have been found to be capable of improvement. It speaks well for our much abused War Office, certainly, that it has discharged its duties with such little friction. We have heard, it is true, of differences of opinion between high officials, but if the rumours which have filled the air had been based on any foundation of truth, it is not to be supposed that the machinery of administration would on trial have worked as it has done, for it is that very machinery which has saved the situation so far as the department is concerned. The aim of those who have circulated these stories doubtless has been to create unpleasantness. If they had only succeeded in doing this the whole fabric of administration would have suffered, which was just what was desired perhaps. What a splendid thing it would have been for the enemies of the War Office to have been able to say that the heads of departments were fighting battles on their own account at the time that disasters and "regrettable incidents" were occurring elsewhere! But, if there have been any slight differences of opinion, it is satisfactory to know that these have not affected the general result, which has brought no little credit on chiefs of departments.

Whilst recognising the marked ability with which the War Office, in a period of great pressure, has performed its duties, the committee does not, fortunately, pretend to say that all is for the best in the best of all possible armies, as some may be disposed to think. "It is impossible," to quote the language of the Memorandum, "to disregard the evidence that grave defects of organisation, preparation, and training of the Army have become apparent through the test of the war. The army as first constituted was wanting in due proportion of the three arms, being deficient in cavalry and artillery for the work it had to perform." Under this head the Service members have a duty to perform, which it is gratifying to know that they are not disposed to shirk. It is now clear to everybody that, as at first organised, the field force was absolutely powerless to do anything, and the very gravest error of judgment was committed when the proffered services of Colonial mounted troops were refused on the plea that there was no want of mounted men. An attempt has been made to saddle the Intelligence Department with the responsibility of our failure to grasp, in the first instance, the full extent of our difficulties; but such a policy is not to be defended. What was common knowledge in South Africa—that the Boers possessed an essentially mobile army, in whatever other respect ignorance was excusable—ought to have been known to every official at headquarters, without any assistance in the form of official confirmation from the Intelligence Department; and a Government office so bound down by principles of red tape as to close its eyes to facts because there were no official documents to bear them out, can scarcely be commended. "It is evident," the Memorandum goes on to say, "that to ensure the safety of the Empire it will be necessary when the war is ended to remove, by reforms of our military system, the defects which this war has disclosed." This is true; but when the statement is made that "the responsibility for the larger scheme of Imperial defence must rest with the Cabinet or their representatives, the Council of Defence," the committee is going out of its way to tell us what we know already. Who, we may ask, but the Cabinet or "their representatives, the Council of Defence," under existing arrangements could deal with such matters? The same applies to a very unfortunate passage in the Memorandum to the effect that "the relief of the Army from the duty of garrisoning what are purely naval ports and coaling stations abroad is a matter for special consideration." This, it seems to us, is one of those questions which it is best to leave in the hands of the Cabinet or Council of Defence. We fail to see any good that is likely to arise by making it a Service members' question in the present aspect of affairs. It is much to be regretted that this matter was touched upon at all. As to the relations between the Secretary of State for War and the Commander-in-Chief and other War Office officials, we are the first to admit that there are many respects in which we do not at all like the system as it exists. But we are in the middle of a big war just now, which it is recognised that the department immediately responsible for its conduct has managed on the whole with success. Is this a fitting time to raise questions of internal organisation? We doubt it. It will be easy enough to do that when the war is over and accounts are rendered.

With the other portions of the Memorandum we agree cordially. There can no longer be any doubt in the minds of reasoning men, that our army is quite inadequate to the duties which it has to perform, and it is absolutely necessary that in future, as the committee says, a large proportion of it should be "organised as a force complete in itself, and maintained in constant readiness for immediate service." This is most essential in our case, for the very scattered nature of our Empire renders it imperative that we should have one complete Army Corps, at all events, available to strike a blow if required anywhere. And the committee's ideas as to the home army are equally sound. That army, whatever its numbers are, should be thoroughly effective "in organisation, preparation, armament, and training." One only has to look at the disgraceful condition of the Militia to-day to realise the extent to which past Governments have neglected their duty to the nation. Here is a force which in the present campaign we have had to fall back upon as a ready-made reserve. Yet what is its position? It has no transport of its own, no commissariat, no adequate medical organisation. It is cruelly short in numbers, has to be satisfied with any clothing and equipment it can get, and, when actually put into the field, cannot hope to see any of the fighting, because, forsooth, it has been so ill-treated that it is doubted whether its employment in large numbers might not put the whole transport and supply organisation in the field out of gear—at any rate, such is the excuse given by more than one correspondent at the front for its not being pushed on. The British taxpayer is, nevertheless, asked to be satisfied. The Service members are not. They have been ready enough to compliment the War Office on all it has done; but in the most friendly possible spirit they impress upon that department the necessity for immediate action and reform. We do not, as we say, follow the committee in all its arguments. At the same time, we admit that a most useful service has been rendered, which the Government ought to be grateful for and acknowledge.

Mr. Wyndham this week has been subjected to further heckling with regard to the sufferings of the men engaged in the operations at Aldershot on the 11th inst. The fuller information he was able to give the House has not caused us to modify the views we expressed on the subject in our last issue. Unless they are to be blamed for the shortcomings of outside contractors, and for the failings of the circumlocution department in ignoring the adverse reports of general officers upon the service cap, we cannot see that the authorities at Aldershot were in any way guilty of culpable negligence. From the report of the general officer commanding at Aldershot, it seems that all the men had breakfasts before starting for the field day. Moreover, light refreshments were actually supplied and carried by every unit, some in the haversack, but in the majority of cases in transport carts. The only units that did not receive their refreshments on the "Cease fire" were the 5th Worcester Regiment and the 4th Inniskilling Fusiliers. With regard to the former, it seems that the cart conveying the refreshments went astray during the operations. In the case of the Inniskillings, the contractor who had undertaken to provide the refreshments failed from some reason to turn up. This, of course, does not touch the question of head-dresses, which was gone into in some detail in the course of the debate on the Army Estimates on Tuesday night. On this subject Mr. Wyndham assured the House that the War Office was "feeling its way." We can only say that the process appears to be a very lengthy one. The discussion on Tuesday must have made it clear even to the civilian that the question is not quite so simple as it at first sight appears. But the combined wisdom of the circumlocution department ought to suffice to invent a service head-dress suited for the use of troops in hot weather. Now that lives have been lost, and some of the horses, so to speak, have been stolen, perhaps the stable-door will be shut, and a little more expedition be put into the process of "feeling the way."

The question of remounts, always an important one for an army, has proved especially so in connection with the South African war, in which we have had to deal with an enemy exceptionally mobile. It is no wonder, therefore, that when the vote of ten millions for transports and remounts came before the House in the discussion of the Army Estimates on Tuesday, the Servicemen had something to say on the matter. Mr. Wyndham made an interesting statement showing that 91,000 horses had been shipped to South Africa during the present war. If all these horses had been sent out from this country as some—with more regard for the votes of the British agriculturist than respect for the pockets of the British taxpayer—suggested, the outlay would have been enormous, for the cost of transport to South Africa was £35 for each animal. The total cost of the English horse on arrival was from £70 to £75, that of an Argentine horse only £26; and as Argentine and Australian horses served our purpose in Africa, the War Office would not have been justified in providing English horses only. Mr. Wyndham explained that officers had been sent to many parts of the world to secure options for the purchase of horses when they might be needed. He was not inclined to agree in the wholesale condemnation of buying through middlemen, but said the War Office did make some purchases direct from the owners. In the course of the discussion Mr. Wyndham made an interesting statement of General Forestier-Walker's estimate of the relative value of horses. The General thought the large Australian horse best for cavalry purposes, English horses next, and Argentine horses third. For mounted infantry Cape horses were especially useful, and after them Indian and Australian. These criticisms of course refer to the African war, but one point was brought out very clearly in the debate. We never know in what portion of the globe our army may be called upon to serve, and this being so it is not desirable to keep up a big supply of horses in England. The present number might, we think, be increased with advantage, but the suggestion that every cavalry regiment should have two horses to each man is absurd.

A question of considerable interest to officers of the auxiliary forces is to be asked in the House of Commons on Tuesday night. Sir James Woodhouse has given notice of his intention to call attention to the fact that though such officers give their services to the country voluntarily, they are called upon to pay fees for their sors at the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich and the Royal Military College at Sandhurst nearly four times the amount of those paid by officers of the regular forces. Sir James Woodhouse proposes to ask the Under-Secretary for War whether, as some recognition of their services, he can see his way to recommend a diminution of these fees at least in favour of Volunteer officers who have served the State for a definite period.

It would be impossible to exaggerate the value of the work which has been done by Sir Edward Walter, the founder and commandant of the Corps of Commissionaires. What makes this corps so popular with the public is the fact that it is recognised as being self-supporting; its success being mainly due to the men themselves, who from the first have prided themselves upon being self-reliant. As the report, presented at the annual meeting on Saturday last, shows, the present strength is 2,590, and of these 300 are on active service. It is not necessary for us here to say what the objects were with which the Corps of Commissionaires was founded, for those objects are well known and fully appreciated by our readers. It is satisfactory to know, however, that Sir Edward Walter's practical idea for helping the sailor and soldier discharged with a good character is taking root elsewhere than in London. Employers of labour in the Metropolis have done their duty splendidly in finding places for these deserving men. Now steps are being taken to form branches of the Corps of Commissionaires in every town throughout the kingdom which has a population of 50,000 inhabitants. In London, at least, the difficulty of recent years has been, not in finding openings for the rank and file of the corps, but in providing an adequate supply of properly qualified men to fill the positions which have been placed at the disposal of the executive. This shows at once how deep rooted the system inaugurated by Sir Edward Walter is. When the war is over in South Africa there will be, of course, a large influx of time-expired soldiers thrown on the labour market. The moment is most opportune therefore for starting the new branches, and it would be a pity if anything were to happen to upset Sir Edward Walter's plans. The great thing is to make the system of the corps, its aims, and its objects known. With this view we trust that every endeavour may be made by all, working in the interests of sailor and soldier, to assist the executive of the Corps of Commissionaires in every way possible, seeing that those who join the organisation are under strict discipline, and helped to make due provision for their declining years. These are great features in favour of this corps, which employers of labour and the men themselves cannot fail to appreciate.

The news that the Home Government has accepted help from the West Indies in the Ashanti War is welcome. The desire of these sorely tried colonies to be represented at the front in South Africa received scant enough consideration, so that their willingness to send assistance to a less popular field of action is the more commendable. Fighting in West Africa is a vastly different affair from fighting in South Africa. No one knows it better than the West Indian. The West India Regiment has served in the region many times with distinction, but this is the first time the West Indian Militia has been employed outside the bounds of the islands. The strong contingent, which is rapidly being organised, should be of the utmost assistance to Colonel Willcocks. Not only will the men be inured to a tropical climate, but they will form an element of strength in a mixed force of natives such as only our harassed officers in Ashanti can properly appreciate. The very fact that their assistance has been asked is promising for the future conduct of the campaign. At last the Colonial Office appears to have realised what a formidable undertaking the reconquest of Ashanti may turn out to be. The only way to ensure success is to spare no expense in the first instance. With the arrival of the West Indians and other reinforcements, Colonel Willcocks should have sufficient men to advance on Kumasi. To enable him to overcome the jungle beyond the Prah, which is now almost impassable with swollen watercourses, thousands of additional carriers are being pushed forward to the front, so as to enable each carrier to bear a lighter load, and thus secure greater speed. Like most of our later Colonial disasters, the present rising will have served a good purpose if it brings home to the Government the necessity of not interfering with native caste and other prejudices, the root of most evil, as we have learnt over and over again in the history of our Empire. From every point of view—political, strategic, and commercial—railways are essential to the coast. Had these been in existence, the present war would probably never have been anything but a detail in our Colonial annals.

Newspaper managers will, perhaps, hesitate to despatch corps of highly-paid correspondents to accompany or follow a British Army in any future war after the sad and costly experience they have had of the censorship corrective and prohibitive. At the most anxious moment when the public are expecting "the closing of the net," "the surrender of —," or "the capture of the Boer Army," an order is given: "No press telegrams are to be passed." For days darkness descends upon the land. We must be satisfied with conjecture, hypothesis, and hoping for the best. The correspondents write interesting and belated letters. They make books out of them afterwards, but it is rarely one of them has the good fortune to send home "news." Few of them have had the luck of the Earl of Rosslyn—an amateur and a prisoner—who was a week in advance with his account of the abandonment of Pretoria by the officials and the virtual surrender of the capital to British occupation. All have had more or less interesting experiences—some have paid in their persons for their devotion to their duty, and others have fallen on the field; but, on the whole, their daring, literary ability, and activity have not enabled their employers to profit by their labours, for the non possumus of the youngest censor has been quite sufficient to put the oldest and most judicious journalist out of action, and to make the result of much enterprise, expenditure, and experience a Dead Sea apple. For all that there were no secrets for the Boers—how could there be? Did the Germans learn much from the French gentle or simple in 1870, or would any army in an enemy's country be kept fully informed by the natives of the movements of the national forces? We do not believe that it would be possible for our authorities in South Africa to adduce a single instance of any injury to the Service in the field being caused by the leakage of a Press telegram.

A correspondent, who asks if we can give him the origin of the saying that "Africa is the grave of great reputations," remarks that the war with the Boer Republics affords more than one illustration of the truth of it; but there is no need to cross the "t's" and dot the "i's" here at present. He goes on to remark that, judging from the notices in the press of the services of the late General Sir Frederick Marshall in the Zulu War, it might be supposed the gallant officer's principal rôle was succeeding in finding the body of the unfortunate Prince Imperial. Sir Frederick went out with a high reputation as an excellent cavalry officer, in command of that arm in the force under Lord Chelmsford, and he had the mortification of seeing his splendid regiments broken up into detachments and placed along the lines of communications by the general, so that only one regiment, under Sir Drury Lowe, was left to him. When the Prince Imperial was allowed to leave headquarters for the purpose of finishing a sketch of country—one he had begun the day before—Sir Richard Harrison, then Quartermaster-General, requested General Marshall to detail an escort for him, and a detachment of Betterton's Horse under Lieut. Carey and a party of Basutos were ordered for duty next morning, but the Basutos did not appear at the rendezvous in time, and the Prince Imperial took upon himself to start with Carey's Europeans. Had the native troopers been with the hapless Prince the Zulus in that fatal hollow would have been detected at once, but it was not to be. The miserable sequel is known to all the world. Next morning Sir Frederick brought the gashed body into camp from the mealy field where the Prince fell with his face to the foe, and it was with astonishment he heard that the suggestion he offered as soon as the news of the surprise reached headquarters to turn out the cavalry at once and proceed to the place where the Prince was left alone, was impracticable. A C.M.G. was his reward for the Zulu war, and many years passed ere, as Colonel of the Royal Dragoons, of which the German Emperor William II. was Colonel-in-Chief, he received the K.C.M.G. With his Imperial Majesty, he soon became persona grata. He was physically a noble representative of the race, and would have pleased Frederick the Great as a fitting recruit for his "giants." Soon after he landed in the Crimea he was appointed A.D.C. to General Scarlett; but the war was nearly over, and after his return home he exchanged to the 2nd Life Guards. That distinguished corps had somehow got out of order, and there was sore want of a firm hand to set it right. Sir Frederick Marshall was the man for the place, and he restored the corps to its high standard of efficiency, and kept it there. In 1873 he became A.D.C. to the Duke of Cambridge, and he remained with his Royal Highness at the Horse Guards till 1877, when he was promoted Major-General, and two years later he proceeded to South Africa in command of the brigade of cavalry. The Queen, the Prince of Wales, the Duke, and the Emperor of Germany were represented at his funeral, and soldiers and civilians followed his remains to the grave, and paid the last tribute to the memory of their honoured friend.

Sir Redvers Buller in an Army Order has acknowledged the services rendered by Brigadier-General Dartnell and the Natal Volunteers. From all accounts this acknowledgement is well deserved. An officer holding a responsible position on Sir Redvers Buller's staff, writing a few weeks ago, in a letter to a friend said: "It would be impossible for anybody to eulogise too highly the services which Dartnell has done since the campaign opened. He was invaluable to General Buller in the retreat from Dundee; indeed, his knowledge of the country turned what might have been a disaster into a success. And it was the same at Ladysmith once he reached there. Dartnell has been a right-hand man of the truest and best kind to all with whom he has done duty. He is always so full of spirit too, and never seems to have to think twice what has to be done. Sir George White owed almost everything to him. If the retreat from Dundee had proved a disaster, the game would have been almost up. That is admitted. I can bear testimony to Sir Redvers' appreciation of his services, for he never fails to acknowledge the value of his advice, and as for the Volunteers serving under him one could not do full justice to them if one tried ever so. They have been a body of heroes. Not one corps but all have done well, and their soldierly qualities are more than appreciated, as will be shown when General Buller returns to England, and has time to prepare his final despatch. He talks of issuing an Army order on the subject. If he does it must not be taken as a simple formal acknowledgment. I know how deep-rooted his feelings are on the subject."

EXPEDITION TO CHINA.

It has been decided to dispatch an Indian Expedition to China, and the corps selected for service are the 1st Bengal Lancers, 7th Duke of Connaught's Bengal Infantry, 24th Punjab Infantry, 1st Sikh Infantry, Queen's Own Madras Sappers and Miners (one company), 1st Madras Infantry (Pioneers), and 22nd Bombay Infantry.

The 1st Bengal Lancers were originally known as Skinner's Horse. The regiment served in the Afghan war of 1842 and that of 1878. The 1st Madras Infantry (Pioneers) is a corps nearly 150 years old, and served at Seringapatam, and in some of the old Indian wars, at Pegu, Afghanistan in 1878, and afterwards in Burma again. The 22nd Bombay Infantry is a corps dating from 1818. The 24th Bengal (Punjab) Infantry was also in the last Afghan campaign. The 1st Sikhs belong to the Punjab Frontier Force, and served in the Punjab war and the last Afghan war. The 7th (Duke of Connaught's) Bengal Infantry was in China in 1858 and in Egypt in 1882. The Queen's Own Madras Sappers and Miners are a distinguished corps and have the Prince of Wales for their honorary colonel. In a long record of service they have been in Egypt three times, in China at Peking and Taku, in Abyssinia, Persia, and Burma.

The Staff of the Indian force under orders to proceed to China will be:—

Commander-in-Chief—Brig.-Gen. Sir A. Gaselee, K.C.B., I.S.C.

Chief of the Staff—Brig.-Gen. E. G. Barrow, C.B., I.S.C.

A.A.G.—Lieut.-Col. G. H. W. O'Sullivan, R.E.

D.A.A.G.—Capt. I. Philipps, 5th Goorkhas.

Brigade Major—Capt. T. Jermyn, 2nd Sikhs.

Intelligence Officer—Capt. E. W. M. Norie, Middlesex Regiment.

Field Intelligence—Capt. M. R. E. Ray, 7th Bengal Infantry.

Special Service Officers—Capt. G. H. C. Mockler, 30th Madras Infantry; Capt. G. de S. Barrow, 4th Bengal Lancers; Capt. the Hon. H. D. Napier, Central India Horse.

Signalling Officers—Capt. G. C. Rigby, Wiltshire Regiment; Lieut. C. E. Scott-Elliot, 4th Madras Pioneers.

Provost Marshal—Capt. R. B. Low, D.S.O., 9th Bengal Lancers.

Principal Medical Officer—Lieut.-Col. J. T. B. Bookey.

Commissariat—Major W. J. H. Bond, Capt. E. G. Vaughan.

Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant at Base—Lieut.-Col. J. C. Swann, 1st Bombay Grenadiers.

Commandant at Base—Major W. S. Delamain, 23rd Bombay Infantry.

Adjutant at Base—Lieut. E. C. Creagh, 4th Punjabis.

Commanding R.E.—Major G. K. Scott Moncrieff, R.E., with Lieut. H. Cowie, R.E., Railway Officer, and Lieut. S. G. Loch, R.E., Telegraph Officer.

Ordnance Officer—Capt. M. Campbell, R.G.A.

THE Adjutant-General has called for the names of colour-sergeants of infantry willing to join the Chinese Regiment, on an engagement for two years. The pay is £200 per annum.

HIGHLAND BRIGADE CONCERT.—The concert to be given in the Queen's Hall on July 4, with a view to forming a fund for the widows and fatherless bairns of the men of the Highland regiments killed in South Africa, is being taken up most enthusiastically. A very strong programme is being arranged, a number of the leading artistes of the day giving their services. The hon. treasurer, Scots Corporation Hall, Crane Court, E.C., has received a number of donations, and further ones will be welcomed. Messrs. Coutts and Co., 59, Strand, have kindly consented to receive donations.

TO MILITARY MEN AND OTHERS.—PIPECLAY SUPERSEDED BY PICKERING'S "BLANCO" for Whitening Belts, Helmets, Gloves, &c. "Blanco" removes stains and discolorations, and ensures evenness of colour, and a soft silky surface. Does not dust or soil. Much better, more convenient, and cheaper than pipeclay. No trouble of preparation. "Blanco" is sold everywhere in cup-shaped blocks, in zinc non-corrosive boxes. Manufacturers: JOSEPH PICKERING and SONS, Sheffield.

Army Personal.

Lord Wolseley will preside, and Lord Wantage, V.C., General Sir Evelyn Wood, V.C., Lieut.-General Sir George White, V.C., and Major-Generals H. Trotter and A. E. Turner will be guests at the banquet, on Thursday next, at the Hotel Cecil, to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of the First Volunteer Review, before Her Majesty, in Hyde Park, on June 23, 1860.

General Sir George Willis, Colonel of the Middlesex Regiment, is, we regret to learn, still suffering from the effects of malarial fever by which he was attacked some six months ago. He had a serious relapse last month, his condition for several days giving rise to much anxiety. The latest reports, however, are more favourable, though the veteran general is still quite prostrate at his residence, Seabank, Bournemouth.

General Sir Richard Harrison, Inspector-General of Fortifications, inspected the Yeomen of the Guard in the gardens of St. James's Palace on Tuesday. Earl Waldegrave, Captain of the Guard, was in command, and there were but few short of the establishment of 108 officers and Yeomen on parade. The General congratulated the Yeomen on their good appearance. There was a large attendance of spectators, including Princess Victor of Hohenlohe-Langenbourg, the Earl of Hopetoun (Lord Chamberlain), General Sir John M'Neill, and Colonel Cary Sanger, U.S. Army. The band of the Grenadier Guards played during the inspection.

Lieut.-General Sir George White, V.C., was on Saturday last the recipient of a people's presentation in the form of a thoroughbred Irish charger, fully caparisoned, the ceremony taking place at the Balmoral Show Grounds, Belfast; and Lady White was presented with a valuable diamond bracelet. The presentations were subscribed for by the working classes, who were present in large numbers, and accorded the defender of Ladysmith an enthusiastic welcome. The subscribers numbered some 20,000. Sir George had a triumphant progress through the city, the line of route being decorated with flags. Many places of business closed early to allow the employees a half-holiday, and everywhere vast crowds had collected. Prior to the presentation General White inspected the local company of the Boys' Brigade in the show grounds. In accepting the presentation the General said he would highly value it as a spontaneous gift from his fellow-countrymen and as proof that they recognised that all ranks serving under his command had done their duty.

Lieut.-General J. F. Owen, R.A., has been granted a Distinguished Service Reward of £100 a year. General Owen joined the Army October 1, 1857, and was promoted Major-General February 7, 1894, and Lieut.-General February 20, 1899. He took part in the Zulu War, 1879, and was present at the battle of Ulundi. He was mentioned in despatches, promoted Brevet Lieut.-Colonel, and medal with clasp.

Major-General Lord Frankfort de Montmorency, K.C.B., took the oath and subscribed

The personal estate of Major-General A. G. Wauchope, C.B., who was killed at the battle of Magersfontein on December 11 last, has been proved under £82,742.

Major-General R. S. S. Baden-Powell by his promotion to the rank of Lieut.-General may be considered the most junior of all officers holding that rank. He is a Major-General, it is true, but as a Colonel he stood junior to all officers now holding temporary General's rank (Major-Generals or Brigadier-Generals), with the exception of Generals Bruce-Hamilton, C. W. H. Douglas, A.D.C., W. G. Knox, C.B., J. G. Maxwell, D.S.O., H. A. MacDonald, F. W. Kitchener, R. G. Broadwood, H. L. Smith-Dorrien, J. F. Brocklehurst, M.V.O., T. C. Porter, C. P. Ridley, and T. E. Stephenson.

Colonel Lord Errol, late of the Royal Horse Guards, is now commanding a brigade of Imperial Yeomanry in South Africa with the rank of Brigadier-General.

Colonel B. T. Mahon, D.S.O., 8th Hussars, would seem to deserve every credit for his brilliant performance in effecting the relief of Mafeking. The special correspondent of the Daily Telegraph writes:—

"When Major-General Hunter entrusted the command of the force to Mahon, in a letter to the latter he said: 'The work entrusted to you is certainly one of the most dashing [exploits] of the war, and every man under your command has been carefully picked for it. I wish you God-speed in the undertaking.' The march of 250 miles in really ten days through a dry country—and the frequent deviations from what are called roads in South Africa necessitate travelling over the rough veldt and through ugly drifts or fords—is something of which the brigadier can be proud; and well did the Colonial corps entrusted with the work carry it out. There was no grumbling even when it was bitterly cold, and no fires could be lighted, and when water was not to be got. Every man in the column proved himself a hero, whose one desire was to reach and relieve Mafeking."

Colonel N. L. Walford, commanding R.A. Western District, has gone to the Paris Exhibition as a juror.

Colonel S. Waller, Commanding Royal Engineer, Home District, has been appointed president of a committee of the commanding officers of Volunteer Engineer Corps throughout the kingdom, which is to consider matters affecting the general welfare and efficiency of the Volunteer Engineer service.

Colonel C. Hoskyns, half-pay, R.E., has been appointed to Salisbury Plain, in connection with the scheme for the provision of extensive rifle ranges there.

Colonel A. E. W. Goldamid, who went out to South Africa from Aldershot as A.A.G. to Lieut.-General Kelly-Kenny in December last, is shown in the June "Army List" as being on the active half-pay list. But this is clearly an error, as he was lately appointed Commandant at Naauwport, and more recently took up the duties of A.A.G. for Transport on the staff of the Field Force.

Colonel H. Cooper, A.D.C., who arrived in South Africa on special service at the beginning of the year, has been appointed Colonel on the staff commanding base, Cape Colony.

Colonel R. B. Mainwaring, C.M.G., now in South Africa, has been selected for the command of the 23rd Regimental District, Wrexham.

Colonel R. C. Græme, half-pay, lately commanding the 63rd Regimental District, and formerly of the King's Own Light Infantry, will be placed on the Retired List on Wednesday next, on attaining the limit of age.

Colonel A. W. Collard, A.S.C., D.A.A.G., Halifax, N.S., has been ordered to proceed to Tientsin to join the Staff of the Forces in China.

Colonel H. W. Jackson, late Gordon Highlanders, is officiating as Sirdar of the Egyptian Army in the absence of Sir Reginald Wingate, on leave in England.

Colonel F. F. Johnson, A.S.C., A.A.G. for Supplies on Lord Roberts's Headquarter Staff, has unfortunately been invalided to England, and left Cape Town in the Umbria on the 6th inst.

Colonel H. E. Penton, I.S.C., has been appointed to the command of the Nagpore District, vice Colonel Lyster resigned.

Lieut.-Colonel F. W. J. Eustace, who has been commanding a Brigade Division R.H.A. in Natal, has been appointed to the staff of the Field Force as an A.A.G. for R.H.A.

Lieut.-Colonel E. Gunter, retired list, late East Lancashire Regiment, is employed temporarily as an Instructor at the Royal Military College.

Lieut.-Colonel G. F. R. Henderson, having arrived home from South Africa, invalided, has been placed on temporary half-pay. His duties as Director-General of Military Intelligence with the Field Force have been entrusted to Major C. J. Mackenzie, Seaforth Highlanders.

Lieut.-Colonel C. A. P. Burroughs arrived at Cape Coast Castle on Monday in the transport Albertville, in command of fifteen officers, six European non-commissioned officers, and 475 men of the new West African Regiment. Among the officers were Major F. E. Ryde, West India Regiment; Captains R. M. Stallard, Bedfordshire Regiment; A. L. Cartwright, Durham Light Infantry; F. B. Luard, H. J. Thompson, and J. H. Stewart, West India Regiment; and Lieuts. G. A. Stevens, Royal Fusiliers; P. E. Lonsdale, East Lancashire Regiment; A. A. St. Hill, Duke of Wellington's Regiment; R. R. Gibson, Dorsetshire Regiment; and V. J. Tighe, R. H. Wilford, L. K. Brounlie, and J. A. Greer, and 2nd Lieut. S. G. V. Ellis, West India Regiment. Colonel Burroughs, it may be mentioned, was recently selected for the command of the West African Regiment, after he had been retired for age from the 1st Batn. South Lancashire Regiment, of which he was second in command, on account of the exceptionally creditable nature of his confidential reports; his late commanding officer, Lieut.-Colonel McCarthy O'Leary, who was killed in the fighting before Ladysmith on February 27, stating that he was one of the best regimental officers it had ever been his pleasure to serve with or meet.

The officers wounded in the fighting in Ashanti were: Lieut.-Colonels (Brevet-Majors) C. H. P. Carter, C.M.G., Royal Scots, commanding Southern Nigeria Constabulary (severely), and P. S. Wilkinson, Northumberland Fusiliers, Inspector-General Gold Coast Constabulary (slightly); Captain E. P. S. Roupell, Milford Haven Submarine Miners Militia (severely); and Lieuts. W. E. Edwards, R.G.A. (severely); and C. E. J. O'Malley, 6th Batn. Middlesex Regiment (severely).

Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel P. W. Le Gallais, 8th Hussars, on arrival in South Africa on special service, was appointed A.A.G. on the cavalry staff.

Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel C. H. Powell, I.S.C., has been appointed to the staff of the Intelligence Department (18, Queen Anne's Gate, S.W.) as a temporary D.A.A.G.

Major Bingham, 1st Life Guards, who went to South Africa as A.D.C. to Major-General Brabazon, has now joined the staff of Lieut.-General French in the same capacity.

Major G. H. L. Carew, D.S.O., 7th Hussars, who has been given the local rank of Brigadier-General in South Africa for service under Sir Frederick Carrington, is to review his troops today, a telegram from Bulawayo says, before making an advance towards the Transvaal frontier.

The brigade consists of contingents from New South Wales, Victoria, Queensland, West Australia, South Australia, and Tasmania.

Major F. F. Minchin, R.G.A., commanding No. 37 Company, Southern Division, Ceylon, has been selected for employment on the Ordnance Inspectional Staff at Woolwich.

Major H. V. Kent, R.E., has vacated his appointment as Staff Captain for Military Intelligence (18, Queen Anne's Gate, S.W.) on promotion, and has taken up duty at Portsmouth. He is succeeded by Captain A. L. Lynden-Bell, the Buffs.

Major S. G. Radcliff, 33rd Madras Infantry; Captains J. A. Douglas, 2nd Bengal Lancers; E. A. W. Stotherd, 4th Hyderabad Cavalry; and Lieuts. R. A. Steel, 17th Bengal Cavalry, and W. L. O. Twiss, 25th Madras Infantry, have been ordered to leave India at once for South Africa on transport service.

The Colonial Office has issued a list of Europeans believed to be in Kumasi. These include Sir F. M. and Lady Hodgson; Major (Captain) A. H. Morris, D.S.O., Royal Irish Regiment, commandant Northern Territories, the Acting Commissioner; Captains J. E. C. Cochrane, Donegal Artillery; F. E. Bishop, 3rd Batn. Bedfordshire Regiment; B. M. Read, 4th Batn. Cheshire Regiment; C. H. Armitage, 3rd Batn. South Wales Borderers; F. E. Bishop, 5th Batn. Worcestershire Regiment; F. R. B. Parmeter, 4th Batn. East Surrey Regiment; J. G. O. Aplin, C.M.G., 3rd Batn. Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry; G. Marshall, 2nd Batn. Royal West Kent Regiment; and G. C. Digan, 1st Batn. Connaught Rangers; and Lieut. A. P. Berthon, 1st Batn. Royal Munster Fusiliers; Drs. P. J. Garland, E. H. Tweedy, A. J. Chalmers, W. M. Graham, J. B. Hay, W. F. Macfarlane, and Mr. J. C. Ralph.

Brevet-Major Lord Edward Cecil, D.S.O., Grenadier Guards, was referred to in a despatch from Lord Roberts, dated Pretoria, June 22, as "the Administrator of the Rustenburg district." In that capacity he had collected 3,000 rifles from Boers who had laid down arms and returned to their farms.

Brevet-Major the Hon. C. E. Walsh, Recruiting Staff Officer, Home District, has been appointed Chief Constable of Radnorshire. He was severely wounded at the battle of Atbara in 1898.

Captain H. Coningham, R.A., has been appointed an Instructor in Military Topography at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich.

Captain J. R. O'Connell, Shropshire Light Infantry, commanding the 2nd Egyptian Battalion, has been acting as commandant, Kordofan. He has just taken leave until August 22.

Dr. Warre, Headmaster of Eton, whose interest in the Volunteer movement is well known, has consented to read a paper at the Royal United Service Institution on the 27th inst., on the "Relations between Public Secondary Schools and the National Defence of the Country."

WAR SUMMARY.

Saturday, June 16.

Late last night a despatch from Lord Roberts was issued from the War Office giving the details of the fighting on the 12th inst., which resulted in Gen. Botha's retreat during the night. The Boers had devoted so much attention to strengthening their flanks that they had seriously weakened their centre. Perceiving this, Lord Roberts ordered Gen. Ian Hamilton to attack Diamond Hill, the key of the position. The operation was entrusted to the Sussex and Derbyshire Regiments, and the City Imperial Volunteers, supported by the Guards Brigade, and covered by the guns of the 62nd Battery, R.F.A. The advance was carried out, Lord Roberts said, "in the most gallant manner over difficult country, and was in every way successful. The steady advance of our brave infantry under a heavy fire was grand." The seizure of the hill inspired the enemy with the idea that they were "practically surrounded," and led to their hasty retreat, in the course of which they were followed up on the 13th by some of the mounted corps. Our total casualties were less than 100. Gen. Ian Hamilton was slightly wounded, but not incapacitated from duty; the Guards Brigade had one officer and 11 men wounded; Gen. French's Cavalry Brigade one killed and six wounded. The City of London Imperial Volunteers, Lord Roberts says, "greatly distinguished themselves;" they have one officer, Lieut. Alt, and one man killed, and 24 men wounded.

An interesting despatch was received from Lord Roberts during the afternoon indicating the movements of the various British columns. On the 14th inst., Gen. Baden-Powell—now promoted to the local rank of lieutenant-general—occupied Rustenburg, 60 miles west of Pretoria, after restoring order in all the districts through which he had passed. Over 1,000 stand of arms had been surrendered to him, and Hans Eloff and Piet Kruger, the latter a son of the President, had been disarmed. A column, Lord Roberts' stated, was to leave Pretoria to-day to join hands with Gen. Baden-Powell and repair the telegraph line. Gen. Hunter was moving eastwards from Potchefstroom towards Johannesburg. Heidelberg was to be at once occupied by a force from Pretoria. "When," the despatch continued, "Gen. Buller is able to advance as far as Standerton, the Orange River Colony will be completely cut off from the Transvaal." This was the position of affairs when the week opened on Sunday.

Sir Redvers Buller, telegraphing from Laing's Nek, denounced in strong terms the outrages committed by the Boers on private property during the occupation of Northern Natal. The houses, he said, had been "desecrated with filthy ingenuity."

In a despatch to-day Lord Roberts reported the attack made on the 14th inst. on our post at Zand River by 800 Boers with three guns. They were driven off by Gen. Knox, who moved out from Kroonstad with a small force of all arms. They left behind four dead, one wounded, and three prisoners. The British loss was Major Seymour, of the Pioneers, and two men killed, and one officer and eight men wounded.

The Times published an interesting account from its special correspondent of the fighting at Gans Vlei and Almonds Nek on the 10th and 11th inst. He sums up by saying that the very highest praise is due to Gen. Buller for his really remarkable achievement: "He has completed a movement which clears Natal of the enemy with a loss of about 30 killed and 130 wounded. A direct attack on Laing's Nek would probably have cost us 2,000 casualties." Gen. Buller had received a message from the Queen congratulating him and his troops upon their success, and hoping that the wounded are doing well. In reply Gen. Buller thanked Her Majesty, in the name of all the troops, for her gracious message, and said that all the wounded were progressing well.

Sunday, June 17.

Lieut.-Gen. Hildyard, with his division, arrived at Wakkerstroom, having met with no opposition on the march. Numbers of Boers surrendered to him and took the oath of neutrality, expressing themselves disgusted with the war and their leaders.

Monday, June 18.

Sir Redvers Buller issued an Army Order expressing his high appreciation of the services of Brig.-Gen. Dartnell and the Natal Volunteers. "In the operations resulting in the expulsion of the enemy from Natal they have borne their full share, and contributed largely to the successful issue. The general recognises the sacrifices they cheerfully made in order to remain in the field, and feels that the time has come to release as many as possible from the duty they have patriotically undertaken. He has, therefore, asked Gen. Dartnell to undertake the defence of the Dundee section of the Eastern Frontier, and to allow the Volunteers not required for this duty to return home." A correspondent adds:—"There is no doubt about it, these men have won the admiration of all by their splendid qualities, every general out here being agreed as to the excellence of the work they and Gen. Dartnell have done."

Lieut.-Gen. Baden-Powell arrived at Pretoria shortly after midday.

Tuesday, June 19.

Gen. Rundle, with yeomanry and artillery, smartly repulsed during the morning a body of Boers who were attempting to work round his left. The repulse was effected by a rapid forward movement of the yeomanry, with three guns in support of the pickets. Under cover of the artillery our troops advanced to rifle range and engaged the enemy, the guns meanwhile searching a kopje held by the Boers. The enemy's advance was thus immediately checked, and they were forced to retire again amongst the hills. Gen. Rundle was loud in his praise of the yeomen troopers, who displayed the best qualities of soldiers, being cautious and alert.

Lord Roberts, in a telegram received during the morning, reported all quiet at Pretoria and Johannesburg. Over 2,000 stand of arms had been given up in Pretoria, he said, since our occupation, and these were being utilised for the released prisoners, who number 148 officers and 3,039 men.

Sir Redvers Buller reported: "First train passed through Laing's Nek tunnel at 3 p.m. yesterday. Engineer Pontoon Troop and 17th Company of Engineers have both done exceedingly well."

Lord Methuen to-day scored another success over Commandant De Wet. The Boer leader attempted to prevent him from entering Heilbron with a large convoy, but was promptly routed.

Wednesday, June 20.

Lord Roberts reported from Pretoria that Gen. Hunter's advanced columns occupied Krugersdorp without opposition on Monday. Lieut.-Gen. Baden-Powell had left Pretoria on return to Rustenburg, in which neighbourhood Major-Gen. Hutton's Mounted Infantry yesterday captured two guns from a body of the enemy under Commandant Du Plessis. Communication between Pretoria and Cape Town, both railway and telegraph, has been completely restored.

Thursday, June 21.

Lord Roberts reported that Gen. Ian Hamilton reached Springs to-day, en route for Heidelberg to join Sir Redvers Buller's troops, and thus effectually cut off communications between the Transvaalers and the Free State Boers. From the western districts Gen. Baden-Powell sends a report of the capture of Commandant Steyn, and the pacification of the country.

Sir Redvers Buller's force to-day continued its advance and reached Paardekop, which is about 30 miles from Standerton. Considerable numbers of the Boers in the district had surrendered daily. Gen. Hildyard had joined Gen. Clery at Sandspruit. The railway was open to Sandspruit Station.

Friday, June 22.

Able Seamen 160621 W. Thompson, 142561 C. Connor, 187682 E. J. Read, all of H.M.S. Tartar, who were reported missing in connection with the attack on the armoured train near Estcourt, on Nov. 15, were stated in an official notification from the Admiralty received to-night to have escaped and joined the Naval Brigade at Pretoria.

Major-Gen. Herbert Dawson Slade, Colonel, retired list, late of the 1st Dragoon Guards, died on the 15th inst. Born in 1824, eldest son of the late Gen. Sir John Slade, Bart., he joined the Army Oct. 25, 1842; became Lieut. June 9, 1846; Captain Aug. 28, 1849; Major Oct. 21, 1859; Lieut.-Colonel July 22, 1868; Colonel July 22, 1873; and retired with the hon. rank of Major-General Dec. 9, 1881. He served with the King's Dragoon Guards in the Crimea, including the battle of the Tchernaya and siege and fall of Sebastopol, acting for a time as Aide-de-Camp to Major-Gen. Sir J. Yorke Scarlett. He also took part in the campaign in China in 1860, was present at the fall of the Taku forts, and engaged in the actions of Sept. 18 and 21 and in the advance on Peking. Gen. Slade married, in 1851, Harriet Augusta, daughter of Mr. C. F. Bolton, Tullydonnel, county Louth, who survives him.

Col. Lord Loch, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., 4th Bath Cheshire Regiment, died at his residence, 22, Lowndes Square, on the 20th inst. Born May 23, 1827, the son of Mr. James Loch, M.P., of Drylaw, Midlothian, he entered the Royal Navy, in which he served for two years. He then entered the 3rd Bengal Cavalry, and two years subsequently was appointed Aide-de-Camp to Lord Gough, Commander-in-Chief in India, and witnessed several of the engagements of the first Sikh War, which was terminated by Lord Gough's occupation of the citadel of Lahore in Feb. 1846. In 1850 he was appointed Adjutant and second in command of Skinner's Horse, and four years later (1854) he was sent to Bulgaria to assist Gen. Beatson in organising the irregular Turkish cavalry. In the same year he crossed to the Crimea in her Majesty's ship Agamemnon. In 1857 he was attached as private secretary to Lord Elgin's special embassy to China and Japan. The Chinese Mission resulted, after the bombardment of Canton by the British and French Fleets and the advance of the combined forces on Peking, in a treaty signed at Tien-tsin in June, 1858. Mr. Bruce, the British Envoy on his way to Peking, was stopped in the River Pei-ho (or Tien-tsin), and the British admiral, attempting to force a passage, was repulsed with considerable loss. This necessitated a joint English and French expedition against China. The war began towards the end of June, 1860, and, after the defeat of the Chinese on several occasions and vain negotiations, the allied forces advanced towards Peking. They defeated the Chinese at Chang-Kia-Wan and Pa-li-chiau on Sept. 18 and 21 respectively. The most exciting and painful incident in Mr. Loch's career then occurred. Consul Parkes, accompanied by an escort of Fane's Horse, under Lieut. Anderson, and by Mr. Loch and Capt. Brabazon, R.A., proceeded to the enemy's camp with a flag of truce to arrange the conditions of a meeting with a view to a cessation of hostilities. They were treacherously captured by San-Ko-lin-sen, the Tartar general, and sent to Peking, together with two French officers. Arrived at Peking they were thrown into a common prison, where they found themselves with a crowd of seventy or eighty wild-looking prisoners. Ultimately they were released, Lord Elgin having refused to negotiate until they were given up. Of the other captives, Capt. Brabazon, the Abbé de Luc, and Mr. Bowlby, were beheaded, and Lieut. Anderson and others died of ill-usage. In the meantime the allied forces had marched on Peking and invested the city, which surrendered to Sir Hope Grant on Oct. 15. The Summer Palace of the Emperor was plundered by the French soldiers and afterwards burnt by the British. A convention was then signed in Peking by which the Treaty of Tien-tsin was ratified, and China agreed to pay a large war indemnity immediately, and substantial compensation to the families of the murdered prisoners. Mr. Loch was the bearer of the Treaty and Convention to England, as he had previously brought the Treaty of Yeddo in 1858. On his return to England Mr. Loch became private secretary to Sir George Grey, then Home Secretary, and acted in that capacity from 1861 to 1863. In the last-named year he was appointed Governor of the Isle of Man, a post which he held for eighteen years. On his resignation of that post he was made Commissioner of Her Majesty's Woods and Forests, and held that office until 1864. In when he was appointed Governor of Victoria. In 1889 Sir Henry left Melbourne for England on leave of absence, and while in London he was asked by the Government to assume the office of Governor of the Cape of Good Hope and High Commissioner for South Africa. He accepted the duty, and proceeded to the Cape via Melbourne. On his retirement in 1895 from the High Commissionership he was succeeded by Sir Hercules Robinson, afterwards Lord Rosmead. In 1895 Sir Henry was raised to the peerage. He was a G.C.B., G.C.M.G., and an honorary D.C.L. of Oxford. He was appointed to the command of the 2nd Royal Cheshire Militia July 16, 1873, and appointed to the Hon. Colonelcy June 7, 1884.

ert Dawson Slade, 4th Dragoon Guards, died at Cape Town on the 19th inst., aged 46. He was the eldest son of the late Major-General Sir Dawson Slade, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., and was educated at Eton and Sandhurst. He was promoted to a Majority in the 4th Dragoon Guards Aug. 3, 1887, and, succeeding to the command March 7, 1892, held the appointment until March 7, 1896, when he was placed on half-pay. He afterwards retired on retired pay.

Surg.-Lieut.-Col. James Stevenson Forrester, Royal Horse Guards, died at Cape Town on the 19th inst., aged 46. Having joined the Army Medical Service in 1874, he went through the Egyptian campaign of 1882, and was present at the engagement at Tel-el-Mahuta, in the two actions at Kassassin, and the battle of Tel-el-Kebir (medal with clasp and bronze star). He afterwards joined the Blues as Surgeon, was promoted Surgeon-Lieut.-Colonel 1st Life Guards Oct. 25, 1894, and rejoined his old regiment Oct. 13, 1897. He embarked in October last in medical charge of the Composite Regiment of Household Cavalry, with which he served up to the time that he had to go on to the sick list.

Capt. Hugh Galloway, King's Own Royal Lancaster Regiment, died at Taiping, Straits Settlements, on the 31st ult. Born Nov. 27, 1872, he joined the King's Own as 2nd Lieut. Nov. 7, 1891; became Lieut. May 2, 1894; and Captain Jan. 25 last. He had been employed since June, 1899, with the Malay Guides.

Capt. Charles James Kinahan Maguire, 1st Batn. Royal Sussex Regiment, was killed in action near Pretoria on the 12th inst. Born March 31, 1872, he joined the Royal Sussex Regiment as 2nd Lieut. from the Militia March 12, 1892; became Lieut. May 30, 1894; and Captain April 24, 1899.

Capt. George William Moyses Harmer, late of the 81st Regiment, died at Osbaston, Monmouth, on the 18th inst., aged 68 years.

Capt. Malcolm Wilson, 1st Batn. Royal Irish Fusiliers and 1st Batn. West African Frontier Force, was killed in the fighting in Ashanti last week. Born Nov. 2, 1869, he entered the Royal Irish Fusiliers as a 2nd Lieut. from the Militia in Oct. 1891; obtained his Lieutenancy in May, 1894; and took part in the Nile Expedition of 1898. He was seconded for service in the Niger territories with the West African Frontier Force, April 22, 1899, and obtained his company only on Feb. 24 last.

Capt. C. F. Harrison, Royal Canadian Mounted Infantry, died at Wynberg, on the 9th inst., of enteric fever. He was a prominent man in New Brunswick, and will be lamented by many friends there. He served in the force employed to suppress the Riel Rebellion in North-West Canada in 1885, and was granted the medal for that campaign.

Capt. Lord Monson, retired, late 52nd Light Infantry, died at Florence on the 18th inst.. Debonnaire John Monson, eighth Baron Monson in the peerage of Great Britain and a baronet of England, was a son of the sixth baron by Eliza, daughter of Mr. Edmund Larken, and was born in 1830. In 1848 he joined the 52nd Light Infantry; served in the Indian Mutiny, being present at the siege of Delhi; and retired from the Army in 1861, when he married Augusta Louise Constance, youngest daughter of Col. the Hon. A. Ellis. He was afterwards appointed Comptroller and Treasurer of the Household of the Duke of Edinburgh (now Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha), and his wife was appointed a Lady-in-Waiting to the Duchess. He was also Sergeant-at-Arms to the Queen. In 1898 he succeeded his brother, the first and last Viscount Oxenbridge, in the barony of Monson. Lord Monson was an elder brother of Sir Edmund Monson, British Ambassador in Paris. The late peer is succeeded in the title by his son, the Hon. Augustus Debonnaire John Monson, who was born in 1868, and is an attaché at the Paris Embassy.

Capt. Horace Mann, Thorneycroft's Horse, was killed in action on the 11th inst. while serving with his corps. He was the eldest surviving son of the Rev. C. N. Mann, for many years rector of St. Issey, Cornwall. Entering the Army in 1882, he was gazetted to the Royal West Kent Regiment. He served in the Nile campaign of 1884-85 (medal with clasp and Khedive's star). In 1890 he was promoted to his company, and acted as Adjutant of the 1st Volunteer Battalion at Tunbridge from 1892 to 1897. He then retired from the Army, but on the outbreak of the war went out to South Africa and was appointed Captain in Thorneycroft's Mounted Infantry. He took part in the battle of Colenso and all the operations leading up to the relief of Ladysmith. In 1889 he married Ada, daughter of Col. T. H. Pitt, R.A., of Hayle Place, Maidstone.

Lieut. Godfrey Charles de Cardonnell Wright, 12th Lancers, was killed in action at Diamond Hill, Pretoria, on the 11th inst. Born Dec. 28, 1872, he joined the 12th Lancers as 2nd Lieut. March 15, 1893, and became Lieut. Oct. 11, 1895.

Lieut. the Hon. Cecil Montague Evans-Freke, 16th Lancers, died at Johannesburg, on the 15th inst., of wounds received in action on the 2nd inst. Born Sept. 3, 1876, youngest son of the Dowager Lady Carbery, of Glaston House, Uppingham, he joined the 16th Lancers as 2nd Lieut., April 7, 1897, and became Lieut. Oct. 17, 1899.

Lieut. Alfonso Byrne, 3rd Batn. Bedfordshire Regiment, attached to the 2nd Batn., died at Bloemfontein on the 10th inst. He was fourth son of Major-Gen. T. E. Byrne, R.A., of Tekels Castle, Camberley, Surrey.

Lieut. Percy L. Kerans, Roberts's Horse, died at Kroonstadt of enteric fever on the 8th inst., aged 23. He was the eldest son of the late Capt. Percy G. Kerans, Indian Staff Corps. He had served for three years in the Cape Mounted Rifles, and joined Roberts's Horse at the beginning of the present war. He had recently recovered from a wound received in action.

2nd Lieut. William Scott Luce, Royal Field Artillery (82nd Battery), was killed in action in the fighting near Pretoria, on the 11th inst. Born March 2, 1880, he joined the Royal Artillery June 25, 1899.

FOREIGN.

Prince De Joinville.—France has lost much by the death of that genial, courteous, and gallant gentleman, the Prince De Joinville, who died last week at his residence in Paris, at the age of eighty-two. He succumbed to pneumonia, from which he had been suffering for two months past. The Prince de Joinville was the third son of Louis Philippe, and had great esteem for our Royal house and was full of kindly gratitude for the hospitality his family had received in England. He was educated for the navy and served in it with distinction, rising to the rank of Vice-Admiral. When the law of expulsion was passed in 1886 he was in the reserve, but in consequence of that law his name was struck from the rolls. He distinguished himself first in his profession during the Mexican War. At the head of a detachment he forced the gates of Vera Cruz and captured with his own hand Gen. Arista. For this service he was made a Captain. In 1840 he brought the remains of Napoleon from St. Helena back to France on board the Belle Poule. In 1843 he went to Rio de Janeiro, where he married Princess Francesca de Braganca, sister of Dom Pedro II. Two years later he took command of the Mediterranean Squadron, bombarded Tangier and took Mogador, after which he was promoted Vice-Admiral. The Prince was at Algiers with the Duc d'Aumale when the revolution of 1848 broke out. He gave up his command to the Republican authorities and came to England. In 1861, when the Civil War began in the United States, the Prince went to New York with his son, the Duc de Penthièvre, and his nephews, the Comte de Paris and the Duc de Chartres, whom he presented to President Lincoln. His son entered the Naval Academy and his nephews served in the army, attached to the general staff of Gen. McClellan. When the war with Germany began he begged to be employed, no matter in what station. Subsequently he repaired to Paris upon the fall of Napoleon. Under the title of "Col. Lutherod" he managed to fight against the enemies of his country, but Gambetta was afraid and caused his arrest and deportation to England. Later on he was elected to the Assembly. He has written a good deal on naval matters in the Revue des Deux Mondes, and has published several works.

THE ALDERSHOT DISASTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I was very pleased to find that you took such a reasonable view on Saturday last of what is now called the Aldershot disaster. My battalion, it so happened, did not suffer to any extent by the heat, as my excellent quartermaster had taken all necessary precautions to see that the men had a good breakfast before starting. We had as hard a day of it as any battalion on the ground, and we all marched into quarters "smiling," as the saying goes. What I do wish to point out is the scandalous attempts made in some quarters to blame the major-general in acting command. I can bear testimony to the care he took to see that every precaution was adopted. A better and more considerate officer I never served under. In this expression of opinion I am supported, I find, by all to whom I have spoken. It is, I hold, disgraceful that certain sections of the press should show such a tendency to jump on the wrong man. Having taken part in the operations, I can claim to know something of the facts. The heat on Monday, the 11th inst., was by no means excessive until past mid-day. When Gen. Brook found that the day was too hot he sent a staff officer to me to say, "The general is ordering the 'cease fire,' the weather has become so tropical. Please take your men home gently. Did they get a good breakfast as ordered?" I promised that the men should be taken back gently, and they were—with the best results; and I was able to assure the general that the men had enjoyed a good breakfast. When such disasters happen I invariably find that regimental arrangements have failed. My battalion is no better seasoned than the rest. It belongs to the much underrated Militia, but I am glad to say that it was not worse than others, if it was not a great deal better. I heard no complaints. On the contrary, since we marched in here, we have had abundant proof of Gen. Brook's thoughtfulness, and I am sorry to find that this good soldier is the man whom many ignorant critics are anxious that the higher authorities should proceed to hang. I write this simply from an idea of justice, for it seems to me that entirely false notions prevail, and I may be able to set some of them right. Your remarks were so sensible and to the point that I am induced to hope that you will allow me to endorse them as one who knows how matters really stood. I saw some regiments simply racing home. What could their commanding officers expect? The general could not be to blame for such unreasonable disregard of consequences.

A MILITIA C.O.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—If the War Office authorities are unable to stomach the appearance of the soft "wide-awake," such as American troops and Australian troops and others wear "in the field," surely it does not require much invention to give all the men a cap covering such as rifleman use at the butts at Bisley and other places. Hundreds of thousands of such coverings, khaki coloured or white, could be turned out in a few days. Such a covering was worn in the Crimea, and would save many a fatal case of sunstroke. It is quite incredible that such a simple remedy should not be found. A glengarry is a bad cap for some things, but, if not cut away to a thing like a caricature of the old glengarry, it is some protection against the sun owing to the texture of the bonnet; but the forage cap is a good deal worse than the old glengarry. Meantime, till a good hat or helmet is found, the cap cover will be found to meet all wants.

CAVALRY.

Royal Horse Guards (Blue).—Lieut. the Duke of Roxburghe has arrived in England from South Africa, invalided.

2nd Life Guards.—Lieut. Lord Wicklow has arrived in England from South Africa, invalided.

3rd Dragoon Guards.—Major Robertson, D.S.O., on arrival in South Africa on special service, was appointed to the Staff of the Intelligence Department.

5th Dragoon Guards.—2nd Lieut. Head sailed from Cape Town for England on the 12th inst., invalided.

6th Dragoon Guards (Carabineers).—Lieut. Moncrieff sailed from Cape Town for England in the Umbria on the 6th inst., invalided.

7th Dragoon Guards.—Lieut. Vaughan, a nephew of Cardinal Vaughan, who has been invalided from South Africa, received his commission, his order to the front, and his wound all within the space of six weeks. Though he is progressing satisfactorily, the bullet that went through his hand and into his stomach still remains where it at first lodged. Lieut. Vaughan was a Captain in that splendid regiment, the Royal Monmouth Engineers Militia, when he was appointed to the "Black Horse" in January last.

1st (Royal) Dragoons.—Lieut. Godman sailed from Cape Town for England in the Avoca on the 12th inst., invalided.

2nd Dragoons (Royal Scots Greys).—Capt. Bulkeley-Johnson, Egyptian Cavalry, has been granted leave to England until August 15.

7th Hussars.—The officers who have arrived at Aldershot with headquarters are Lieut.-Col. Hon. R. T. Lawley; Capt. Sir K. A. Fraser, Dalgety, Johnstone, Fryer and Rawstone; Lieuts. Leyland and Lord Coke; 2nd Lieuts. Cartwright, Royds, Pollok, Gibbs, Mann-Thomson, Roberts, and Gooch; Capt. and Rdgmr. Dibble, and Lieut. and Qrmr. Durman.

8th Hussars.—Lieut. Threlfall sailed from Cape Town for England on the 6th inst. in the Umbria, invalided.

10th Hussars.—Lieut. the Hon. W. G. S. Cadogan left Cape Town for England on the 6th inst. in the Umbria, invalided.

12th Lancers.—Published accounts show that Lord Airlie, Lieut. Wright, and the non-commissioned officers and men returned as killed in the fighting near Pretoria last week lost their lives in a splendid charge. Some guns of the Royal Horse Artillery were found to be in danger, and the regiment received the order to press forward and rescue them. The order was no sooner given than horses were at full gallop. The work was admirably done. The Boers retired before the rush of the Lancers, and having got well out of danger suddenly dismounted and opened a terrible fire under which Lord Airlie and Lieut. Wright fell. Capt. Egerton-Green, who was reported missing after the engagement, was captured by the enemy, and is now a prisoner in their hands. He was slightly wounded.

16th Lancers.—A memorial service for Lieut. the Hon C. Montague Evans-Freke, who died of wounds at Johannesburg on the 15th inst., will be held at Glaston Church, near Uppingham, to-day, at half-past three o'clock.

17th Lancers.—Major Ricardo becomes second in command, vice Major the Hon. L. H. D. Fortescue, killed in action.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

The 140th and the 141st batteries R.F.A. are being formed at the Curragh.

The War Office is considering the question of providing a new School of Instruction for the Royal Artillery on Salisbury Plain, and a committee is being formed to suggest a site for the necessary buildings, and consider their cost and other matters concerning the proposal.

Major A. F. Montanaro, R.G.A., has been selected for special service on the Gold Coast.

Major S. G. D. Smith, R.G.A., Ordnance Department, has been granted leave from India to England for one year on private affairs.

Capt. C. Prescott-Decie, R.H.A., and P. W. B. Henning, R.F.A., left Cape Town for England in the Avoca on the 12th inst., invalided.

Capt. Currie and Lieut. Barton, R.G.A., and 2nd Lieut. Cornes, R.F.A., sailed from Cape Town for England in the Umbria on the 6th inst.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Lieuts. T. E. Kelsall and R. Ommanney sailed from Cape Town for England on the 12th inst. in the Avoca, invalided.

INFANTRY.

Grenadier Guards.—A memorial service will be held in the chapel, Wellington Barracks, to-day at 11 a.m. for Capt. Verschoyle, Lieut. Alastair Murray, and the non-commissioned officers and men of the 2nd Batn. who lost their lives in the recent fighting in South Africa. Capt. Tryon and Trotter have been transferred from the 3rd Batn. in South Africa to the 1st Batn. at Windsor on return to England.

Coldstream Guards.—Capt. Wilkinson and Lieut. Hutchison, 1st Batn., left Cape Town on the 6th inst. for England in the Umbria, invalided.

SOLDIERS' DAUGHTERS HOME.

A large company assembled amid pleasant surroundings at the forty-fifth anniversary general meeting of the Soldiers' Daughters Home on Monday afternoon in the grounds of the home at Hampstead, to meet the Duke of Cambridge, who took the chair. Among those present were the Dowager Lady Napier of Magdala, Lady Fremantle, Lieut.-Gen. Lord de Ros (chairman of the General Committee), Lord Heneage, Gen. Sir E. G. Bulwer, Lieut.-Gens. R. W. Lowry, C. B. Ewart, and Gordon Pritchard.

The annual report was read by the secretary. The committee congratulated the supporters and friends of the institution on the maintenance of its favourable position. The subscriptions received were only less than those of the previous year by £14, and when it was considered that a great portion of the British Army was employed in South Africa, and it was impossible for regiments to forward subscriptions while actually engaged in the field, it might well be believed that on the return of peaceful times not only would the regiments in arrear pay the annual grant, but there would be an accession of subscribing battalions. It was well, also, to remember that that old-established institution was not only open for the children of soldiers who had fallen in action or died from disease in the war, but also to those daughters of our soldiers who had an equal claim on the charity of the public as having served their country in all other parts of the world where the British flag flies.

The Duke of Cambridge said that it was some years since he had been at that establishment, and he could not help noticing the great improvement that had taken place. The appearance of the children showed that they were well cared for. They were living in times when everything military was of great interest. There would always be a considerable demand for institutions of that kind, but more so now. They ought to take proper advantage of the present patriotic feeling to impress on the public the necessity of generously supporting such institutions as these. There was a period coming when they ought to be kept up more than ever; but they wanted the means of doing so. That institution was not large enough. They desired to take in 50 more children, and for that they wanted £10,000. They must be prepared to do beforehand what was almost sure to be wanted.

Lord Heneage, in moving the adoption of the report and balance-sheet, observed that they should require at least £15,000 for the enlargement mentioned by his Royal Highness. He saw no reason why they should not ask the Lord Mayor for £20,000 out of the Widows' and Orphans' Fund, and if they could get £10,000 they would be thankful for it. Gen. Lowry seconded the motion, which was carried.

Reviews.

HURRAH FOR THE LIFE OF A SAILOR!

This is the genial name of a most entertaining book, better described by its second title as Fifty Years in the Royal Navy, by Vice-Admiral Sir William Kennedy, K.C.B. (Blackwood & Sons). It is particularly interesting at the present time, because the gallant author has much to say about his experiences in China, where he was engaged both at the Fatsan Creek and the storming of the Taku forts. He entered the Service at the end of 1851, and began his naval career in the Rodney, a 90-gun line-of-battle ship, where he made acquaintance with some of the tortures of his youth—the old midshipmen, whose intemperate character was his greatest blessing, since he only had peace from them when they were helplessly drunk. Once with his messmates he took vengeance by fixing one of these brutes spread-eagle fashion on the deck, and there giving him the chastisement he deserved. The gallant author speaks feelingly upon the question of flogging, for he twice underwent the operation—once for asking if the master's new-born son had a stiff leg like his father; on the second occasion for throwing water over the same worthy's daughter in bed, mistaking her for her brother. The Russian war broke out, and the Rodney was in the Black Sea. The Admiral describes how, in the bombardment of Oct. 17, her stern cable being shot away, she swung on to the shore and grounded in such a position that she was raked by the Russian forts. It was a marvel that she escaped, but she was brought off largely through the gallant efforts of the gun vessel Lynx. Again we have a description of the terrible storm of November, when the Rodney rode out the gale at Katcha, while 13 ships there parted their cables and were driven ashore, only one of them—the Lord Raglan—being got off again, by very fine seamanship. Sir William Kennedy had the good fortune to serve with the Naval Brigade, but at the end of July returned to the ship with an attack of cholera. He was in the China war in the Calcutta and had some very lively experiences. Most modestly he describes how he burnt 35 junks on the stocks in the Canton river. He spent several months in an open boat, and had the temerity once to engage the famous Fatsan flotilla unsupported—"a crew of 14 all told, besides ourselves, two mids!" Luckily they were rescued, and the flotilla retired to the creek. The junks were the pride of the Imperial Navy, and it is well known how they were destroyed. Sir William Kennedy does not think that Sir Harry Keppel has quite done justice to the Calcutta's boats, which had borne all the burden of events in the river before the gallant Commodore arrived. It must, however, be remembered that Sir Harry Keppel's is a personal narrative, and doubtless he will be as glad as anyone else to see the justice done in these vigorous pages to the Calcutta, and to the gallant old chief Sir Michael Seymour. An extremely interesting account is given of the capture of the Peiho forts. The gallant author then had much experience on the East Coast of Africa, including shipwreck, and he has a great deal to say about his later service in the West Indies, when he was in command of the Reindeer—a ship-rigged sloop of 1,000 tons—and he speaks with enthusiasm of his ship's company, and of how they ran into Rio Harbour with the sea breeze, studding sails on both sides, shortening all sail as they came in, and making a running moor—a thing never seen nowadays—to the admiration of the foreign men-of-war in the harbour. When the city of San Salvador was destroyed by an earthquake in 1873, he astonished the President by appearing at the capital with a party of officers and men to tender help. The whole book is full of good humour and witty anecdotes, and makes excellent reading. The author evidently enjoyed being slung over the quarter of his ship with a pipe in his mouth to paint the stern windows; and once he astonished his men by dropping overboard to test their qualities of readiness in emergencies. At Jamaica there was a regatta, and a boat load of niggers carried off the Commodore's prize to the astonishment of everybody, until it was found that his barge had been hauling round a basket full of stones hitched on to the rudder. Meanwhile the niggers had disappeared in triumph with their cup, but were anxiously inquired for. Admiral Kennedy was afterwards Commander-in-Chief at the Cape, and he hauled down his flag with keen regret because it marked the last act of his official career. He has written the story of a true sailorman, and we have rarely read a book so full of good things, or one reflecting so perfectly the character of its author. The good things in it are very numerous, and we advise everyone who can to get hold of the book and read it.

SHORTER NOTICES.

A fresh volume has been added to the series of "Rulers of India," and falls into an early part of the series. It is upon Babar, by Stanley Lane-Poole (Clarendon Press), and it is quite up to the level of its many excellent predecessors. Babar was the grandfather of Akbar, and carved out the empire of which it may be said Akbar was the architect. Babar is the link between Central Asia and India, and, as Mr. Lane-Poole says, between predatory hordes and an Imperial government, between Tamerlane and Akbar. He brought the energy of the Mongol and the courage and capacity of the Turk to the listless Hindu, and by his conquests laid the foundation of the splendid fabric which Akbar reared. Babar was a man of culture as well as of character, and he left memoirs written in a polished style which are, of course, the foundation of Mr. Lane-Poole's biography, wherein we are told how the boy fought for his heritage long against the hordes of Mongols and Uzbeks, and relinquished the hope of his ancestral home to grasp a larger empire. He must always hold a very high place in the history of India, and it is eminently satisfactory that we should possess a biography of this remarkable man from so competent a hand.

THE TRAINING OF SEAMEN.

THE paper which was read on Wednesday by

Mr. J. R. Thursfield, at the invitation of the Council of the Royal United Service Institution, was in many ways remarkable. He did not claim to decide the question as to whether the day of the "discipline of masts and sails" is over—in fact, he distinctly declined to attempt anything of the kind—but he left no doubt upon the minds of his hearers as to what his own views are. Mr. Thursfield is a civilian, but he has been a profound student of naval subjects, his judgments have generally won approval, and his opinions are entitled to a large measure of respect. It is extremely advantageous at the present time to have a paper of this kind read which evokes discussion, and may tend towards the decision of a matter upon which minds are divided in the naval service. Mr. Thursfield started by laying down the accepted principle that a seaman is one who has assimilated the sea as an organic part of his experience, and is as familiar with it as any other craftsman with the materials of his craft. He found no one to dispute the further principle that a gun's crew or a ship's company, or any organised aggregate between the two, is an organism articulate, coherent, and instinct with the sense of common action and comradeship. These two elements of a fighting seaman's efficiency were his subject, and he described the sea as the condition common to both. It was true, also, to say that Nelson would have been more at home with Drake than with a modern admiral under steam. The advent of sails transferred the centre of naval gravity from the Mediterranean to the Atlantic, and Mr. Thursfield insisted that the advent of steam is not unlikely to transfer it to the far larger and more distant areas of the sea which wash the shores of Asia, Africa, Australia and America, and he bids us prepare to hold our own in the new and larger conquest. How then shall we train our seamen, when the vital element of the older seamanship, which was found in the discipline of masts and sails, appears to be vanishing? Certainly no sentiment and no tradition can keep alive a system which right reason and the welfare of the Service condemn. But do they condemn the discipline of masts and sails? Mr. Thursfield argued that they do not. The object of training must be to make the seaman master of himself and of his weapons, and helpful to his comrades, and in the old Navy the training under canvas gave us the best fighting men at sea that the world has ever seen. Seamanship was the foundation, and gunnery was the finish. If you want to make a young man a good lawyer or a good physician, said Mr. Thursfield, you do not begin by teaching him the rudiments of those professions; you give him a good general education first. A very close analogy was then drawn between the discipline of the sailing ship and that which is given by Greek and Latin—"the Humanities"—in a liberal education. The purpose in retaining these is to brace the mind, quicken the intelligence, enlarge the sympathies, and stimulate generally the faculties of the mind; and when Greek and Latin were dead languages the teachers retained them for their purposes, with beneficial results which none can gainsay. To the argument that the old seamanship can henceforth in no case be more than an accidental or artificial part of the modern, the lecturer replied that it is not more accidental or artificial than gymnastics and musical drill. His view was that the essential qualities of self-reliance, resource, quickness of eye and steadiness of nerve, self-possession, and steadfastness in danger and helpfulness in difficulties, cannot be gained without this discipline of masts and sails, or something which shall take the place of it, and he thinks we are entitled to ask those who contend for another system to give proof of the merits of what they propose. Incidentally he remarked that the advent of the torpedo-boat and destroyer at the moment when sail propulsion was just becoming extinct was, for purposes of training officers, almost providential.

It was admitted, however, as a possible objection of undoubted weight, that the qualities engendered by the old system can now only be bought at a price too heavy to pay; also that the bluejacket now-a-days has to learn so much that no time is left to train him on the old system, and that, if there were, the organisation required would be too costly in ships and personnel for the country to provide. But Mr. Thursfield did not admit the validity of these objections. In regard to the question of time, he urged that the British bluejacket serves for a much longer period than any other, though in other navies the old system of training still seems to be considered vital. As to the question of cost, that is for the taxpayer to decide. "If the Admiralty were to say to him, 'You can have this system if you choose to pay for it; it will cost a great deal; indeed, if adequately organised, it will probably run into millions annually, but it will be worth the money;' does any one here doubt that the British taxpayer would provide the money without a murmur?" In other words, if the game is worth the candle, the taxpayer will light the candle and keep it burning. It is a matter of relative advantages, but the lecturer brought forward some statistics to show that the effect of the training squadron has been to increase the acting seaman-gunner's chance of becoming a gunnery instructor or a captain of a gun by more than 33 per cent. A very distinguished officer, who was no advocate of retaining masts and sails, said to him, "I felt myself to be 50 per cent. more worth as a naval officer after two years' experience of that training." Admitting, therefore, the difficulty of giving adequate training under masts and sails, Mr. Thursfield denied that it was impossible, and cited the arguments of Sir Gerard Noel in his favour. He suggested that instead of training boys in harbour training ships for about two years, of which some six weeks are spent in brigs, it would be possible to divide the time into one year spent in harbour and one at sea, partly in the brigs and partly in specially organised training ships, and he remarked that the officers in these particular ships would gain by the experience. The argument was powerfully urged and could not have been in better hands, and the lecturer was ready to admit that, if he cannot be shown that the qualities educed under masts and sails have declined, as the training under them has tended to disappear, the case for the old system must go by default, although, in his own view, sentiment [and tradition are associated with much right reason and intelligent regard for the welfare of the Service.

The sea is once more propounding its riddle in new and strange language; never yet fully interpreted by war, to more nations of the earth than ever before sought or cared to read it. The dominion of the seas will, in the long run, assuredly be the prize of those who can read it aright and read it best."

Here, certainly, was a subject well deserving of discussion, and the lecturer could scarcely have hoped to win all his hearers to his view. The discussion was animated and full of interest, and revealed, indeed, wide divergence of opinion among those most competent to speak. Sir John Hay, Sir Gerard Noel, Sir Cyprian Bridge, and Captain Atkinson, who for two and a half years commanded the Training Squadron, ranged themselves on the side of the lecturer, while Sir Michael Culme-Seymour, Sir N. Bowden-Smith, and Sir John Hopkins powerfully urged the opposite view. So keen was the interest taken in the question at issue, and so many were those present who desired to attack it, that it was wisely determined to resume the discussion next week. Sir Cyprian Bridge and those who agreed with Mr. Thursfield based their arguments on the contention that the object of training under the discipline of masts and sails was to educe facility and not to give mere instruction; but they all agreed that the real business was to make seamen, and Sir Cyprian Bridge put the matter in a clear light when he said that the great lesson to learn is that, if the Training Squadron be done away with, our ships must be more at sea. If the question be thus narrowed down, it is possible that an agreement may be arrived at, though the argument conveyed in Mr. Thursfield's paper went further. Possibly, however, the term "masts and sails" has been used too much, and has alarmed those who are wholly in favour of much sea training. Sir Michael Culme-Seymour put his argument very forcibly, and apparently had not much respect for the statistics presented to illustrate the finer qualities of those men who have passed through the Training Squadron. Indeed, he said that in his own experience the seaman of to-day was better than his predecessors, whereas if the arguments of the opposing school were valid, he should be worse. The crew of the Ramillies, the smallest men physically he had ever commanded, were, in discipline and sea-going qualities, as good as any he had met; and he asked his hearers to carry back their minds to the Crimea, and say whether the Naval Brigade at Ladysmith was not in every way as good as the brigade in the old days. He did not say that the training was perfect. Sir Geoffrey Hornby had suggested that they should have sailing ships to carry all the stores to the colonies, and oblige all the Navy to serve in these ships. But there were very few captains and lieutenants competent to take out heavily-masted ships. As to the training of the officers, he admitted that the Training Squadron was a benefit to the young officers, but it did no good to the men, and he looked on the discussion that day as the last dying gasp of masts and sails. Taking the same line, Sir N. Bowden-Smith contended that the men must be trained in the ships in which they are to fight, while Sir John Hopkins expressed the opinion that as good men could be got without masts and sails as with them. These officers, however, were all in favour of much sea-training. The conclusion of the discussion will doubtless be very interesting, but apparently so divergent are the views of the chiefs of the Service that it might be a wise course for the Admiralty to appoint a committee of leading officers to discuss the matter thoroughly, with all available statistics before them, and then, perhaps, the truth as to the value of the "discipline of masts and sails" might be discovered.

Navy Notes.

We are not able to record the desired information from China. Yesterday afternoon Mr. Brodrick announced that the Government had no news from the Expeditionary Force, or from Peking. There has been much fighting at Tien-tsin, which Rear-Admiral Bruce hoped would be relieved last night. The Chinese shelled the foreign settlement on the 17th, and a force of the Allies, 175 strong, attacked and destroyed the Chinese Military College, which contained large quantities of stores. The Russian guns did much service, and our loss was one killed and five wounded. On the same night the Chinese attempted to seize the bridge of boats, but were repulsed. The gravity of the situation can scarcely be exaggerated, though there is no reason to doubt that the reinforcements now being landed on the Peiho will soon re-establish order in the Tien-tsin district.

Uncertainty still prevails in relation to the column despatched under the Naval Commander-in-Chief, to relieve the Europeans at Peking, where there is reason to know that much outrage has occurred. The expeditionary force under Admiral Seymour numbers more than 2,000, of whom 900 or more are British, but the exact composition of the brigade landed from our ships at Taku is not known. The force left Tien-tsin on June 10, and advanced along the railway to Lo-fa, where headless bodies were found, indications of a struggle, the advance being resumed on the 12th, the day on which the skirmish of the Marines under Major Johnstone, of the Centurion, took place. On the 13th the expeditionary force reached Lang-fang, forty miles from Peking, where the "Boxers" had committed great ravages, and it was reported that General Tungfuhsiang intended to resist the entry of the columns into the capital at the head of 10,000 men. On the next day the railway was cut between Lang-fang and Tien-tsin, and a veil was drawn over the operations. It had been feared that the rising was more serious than appeared when the force left Tien-tsin, and great alarm has existed as to its safety, with a plentiful crop of rumours. Admiral Bruce reported from Chefoo on Thursday that he had had no communication with the Commander-in-Chief for seven days, nor with Tien-tsin, where we had about 3,000 men, and where a great deal of fighting has taken place, and much damage been done, for five days. The Allies were then holding the Taku forts and Tongku, and were preparing a large force to march on Tien-tsin. The Terrible landed 382 officers and men of the Royal Welsh Fusiliers and Royal Engineers on Thursday, and 300 more troops are expected from Wei-hai-Wei to-day.

To capture the Taku Forts had become imperative, and the officers in the several ships can scarcely have been surprised by what happened. A conference appears to have taken place on board the Russian flagship, in the absence of Sir Edward Seymour with the relief column, and an ultimatum was addressed to the commandant at Taku calling upon him to withdraw the forces which had been collected there. On the afternoon of the 16th parties of men were sent in shore from the ships in readiness to storm the forts in case of resistance, and at one o'clock the next morning the Chinese forts opened fire, and an action began which lasted about six hours. The forts were silenced, and the allied forces occupied them, apparently without great resistance. The British ships engaged up the river were the sloop Algerine, and the destroyers Flame and Whiting, and four Chinese torpedo destroyers were captured by the boats last named. There were some casualties in the Algerine, Assistant-Paymaster Hargraves and twelve men being wounded, but the despatch from the commanding officer of the Endymion could give no particulars of the casualties to the storming party. An ordinary seaman of the Barfleur was killed. The Russian vessels engaged were the Koreiets, which was hit in several places and leaked badly, Gilyak, seriously damaged, and Bobr. The losses among the Russians were severe, one lieutenant being killed, one mortally wounded, one severely, and one slightly, while sixteen men were killed and sixty-seven wounded. Captain Launs, of the German gunboat Ilitis, was killed, and Lieut. Kuhne wounded. A Chinese second-class cruiser flying an admiral's flag was detained by the allied admirals outside the Taku Bay. Rear-Admiral Bruce, who was in command, was able to report that his communications with the allied authorities were most harmonious. Three thousand Russian troops were on the spot under a major-general. On our side the Government of India is despatching a fine force, and the Americans, Germans, and French are all preparing to send considerable forces.

It is scarcely possible to give the whereabouts of the sixty or more foreign warships which are now at Taku, or are within reach of the place. The British battleships are the Centurion and Barfleur (flagships of Vice-Admiral Sir Edward Seymour and Rear-Admiral Bruce), and the armoured cruisers Aurora and Orlando on the spot, just joined by the Undaunted from Hong Kong. The Endymion is also at Taku, and the Terrible is expected with the Daphne. Other British ships are the Hermione, the destroyers Hart, Whiting, and Fame, the Alacrity, and the Algerine, sloop. The Russian squadron comprises the Navarin, Petropavlovsk, and Sissoi Veliki; the cruisers Rossia, Dmitri Donskoi, and Admiral Korniloff; the armoured gunboat Gremiastchy; the gunboats Gaidamak, Vsadnik, Koreiets, Gilyak, Mandjour, Bobr, and Sivoutch; and several torpedo-boats. The Japanese have five or six ships at Taku, including the new cruisers Kasagi and Suma, and two others were expected to arrive. The greater number of United States vessels are in the Philippines with Admiral Remy, but Admiral Kempff has in Chinese waters the Newark, Helena, Nashville, Yorktown, and the old Monocacy; and the Oregon, is expected. The German division at Taku consists of the Kaiserin Augusta, Gefion, Hertha, Hansa, and the gunboats Jaguar and Ilitis; and the French division of the D'Entrecasteaux, Descartes, Jean Bart, and the Surprise and Lion, gun vessels; and are to be joined by the Guichen and Amiral Charrier from Europe. Italy is represented by the Elba and Calabria, and Austria by the torpedo cruiser Zenta.

Following up the inquiries which the Navy League has addressed to shipbuilders, Engineering finds that, instead of Mr. Goschen's two battleships of the 1900 programme, sixteen could be taken in hand and completed by 1904. As to armour and engines, it can discover no reason to think that these could not be supplied as required. Extracts from the letters of firms are given, which lead our contemporary to conclude that there is a state of remarkable ignorance as to the resources of the country at the Admiralty. It is pointed out that the Chancellor of the Exchequer has just enunciated the extraordinary opinion that "in the race of shipbuilding we should follow, rather than lead"—an opinion which, placed side by side with the action of the Admiralty, Engineering considers disquieting. The Service Members' Committee, having been subjected to the scathing criticisms of "R. N." in relation to the garrisoning of the coaling stations, is now called to its duty by the Navy League, which urges its members, irrespective of party ties, to take up the question of the unexpended money, and to bring all the pressure they can to bear upon the Admiralty. There can be no doubt that the shipbuilding resources of the country were not exhausted by the work put in hand, and the failure has certainly not been explained. The Navy League is here doing legitimate work.

Although all is not well in the Europa, Mr. Goschen, at the end of last week was able to dispose of the rumours of an absolute fiasco. The cruiser went out to Sydney at what was supposed to be an economical speed, but her speed, varying between eleven and thirteen knots, fell a little below the twelve which is the average in such cases. Her coal consumption was 6,000 tons—not 22,000 tons as certain journals stated—and was high, but the Europa has always been known to be a great coal consumer, and Mr. Bedbrook, chief inspector of machinery, went out in her expressly to discover the cause of this peculiarity of the ship. According to Mr. Goschen he has not officially expressed the opinion that it is due to the Belleville boilers, but there seems to be no reason why the truth should not be known before the cruiser returns to England. The voyage out was of extended duration, but the actual days' steaming numbered forty-nine, the detention having been at Malta and some other places. At Malta some experimental trials were made, and it seems to require explanation why no light was thrown upon the high coal consumption. There is a certain tendency to discredit the Belleville boiler, and Mr. William Allan, of course, seized the opportunity of making his customary denunciation. But, even if the Belleville type should be discredited, the water-tube boiler will remain, and has so far proved its value that it is assured of almost universal adoption. No doubt in the use of water-tube boilers greater skill in stoking is needed, but this is nothing to the disadvantage of the system. It is very necessary for the Admiralty to decide upon the best type of water-tube boiler, and we are willing to credit them with the intention of doing so. But it will certainly appear that the result of the trials of the Europa should be known at Whitehall long before the arrival of the Europa in England again.

An extended report upon the Belleisle trials has been prepared by Captain W. H. May, who has been assisted by Commander Dampier, of the Excellent. The report covers 300 pages of foolscap, and deals with every hit, its effect, and the conclusions drawn by the experts. The report is accompanied by numerous diagrams and photographs. Some further experiments with the Belleisle are contemplated.

In the course of a letter to the Morning Post, Admiral Sir George Elliot has reminded us that he is one of the very few flag officers living who have refused to hold office at the Admiralty. He does not mention in what year he declined office, but it was presumably prior to the passage of the Naval Defence Act, when all naval officers were convinced of the dangerous weakness of our fleet. And, in this connection, Sir G. Elliott appears to explain his reason for declining the usually coveted honour. One day, as the Admiral relates, he met a Naval Lord just leaving the Admiralty. The distinguished official was gloomy, and Sir G. Elliott asked the reason. The Naval Lord pointed to a lamp-post, and replied: "I never pass one of those without feeling that I ought to be hanged up there." He had just signed the Estimates. But the main purport of Admiral Elliot's letter is a criticism of the Belleisle experiments, he not crediting the statement that the woodwork did not ignite. This, however, is no longer a matter of opinion. More valuable is his inquiry as to why the Majestic was enveloped in clouds of smoke, and why smokeless coal is not more freely supplied to our ships. Another retired flag officer, Admiral Close, is concerned about the Thames defences, regarding the divided authority of the War Office, Trinity Board and Lord Mayor as highly perilous to shipping in the event of war. Admiral Close argues that it would be a simple matter for a foreign gunboat to enter the Thames under false colours, or under cover of night, and cause great damage to the docks and shipping. His remedy for this danger is curiously Chinese, for he would block the river with old battleships and wire hawsers.

In consideration of the extension of the Empire and the wide-world duties of the Navy, his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury has sanctioned the substitution of the word "Empire" for "island" in the first prayer for the service at sea, when read by chaplains or officers.

MISS HICHENS, Cert. Med. Rubber and Hospital Trained Nurse, VISITS PATIENTS mornings, RECEIVES from 2 to 6 p.m., or by appointment.—(First Flat), No. 5, Vernon Place, Bloomsbury Square, W.C.

Navv Personal.

The Prince of Wales presented the prizes at the Royal Naval School, Eltham, on Saturday last. This was His Royal Highness's first visit to the Institution, but he has invariably, since 1854, maintained a scholar on the foundation by a donation to its fund.

The Duke of York left London on Monday for Duncombe Park, the seat of the Earl of Faversham. During the week His Royal Highness has laid the foundation stone of a new Town Hall at Helmsley, in the neighbourhood of his lordship's estate.

Prince Alexander, eldest son of the Princess Henry of Battenberg, is to join the Britannia next year. Her Royal Highness called at Dartmouth last week in the royal yacht Victoria and Albert, and visited the cadets' training establishment.

Admiral of the Fleet the Earl of Clanwilliam; Captain the Earl of Glasgow; Admirals Sir Arthur Farquhar, Sir Richard Tracey (Royal Naval College, Greenwich), Sir Algernon Heneage and Henry Boys; Vice-Admirals Sir Charles Knowles, Bart., and Sir Henry Stephenson; and Rear-Admirals Sir Lambton Loraine, Bart., Leicester Keppel, Arthur Moore (Junior Naval Lord), and Swinton Holland (Chatham Dockyard), were present when the Prince of Wales presented the prizes at the Royal Naval School at Eltham on Saturday last. Lord Clanwilliam, in proposing a vote of thanks to his Royal Highness, remarked that the day would be a red-letter one for the school, and it would go forth to old boys now abroad, many of whom were now fighting for Queen and country, that they had been specially honoured by the presence of the Prince of Wales.

Admirals of the Fleet Sir J. Edmund Commerell, V.C., and the Earl of Clanwilliam had the honour of receiving the Princess Christian when her Royal Highness arrived at the Olympia on Tuesday last at the opening of the Naval and Military Bazaar.

Admirals Sir Leopold M'Cintock, Sir Anthony Hoskins, H. P. de Kantzow, T. Le H. Ward, J. H. Cave, and Vice-Admiral Sir Cyprian Bridge attended the annual conversazione of the Royal Geographical Society on Tuesday last at the Natural History Museum, South Kensington.

Admirals Sir E. G. Fanshawe and Sir H. F. Nicholson; Captains his Serene Highness Prince Louis of Battenberg and Sir A. Milne; Commanders H. Russell, the Hon. C. Cadogan, C. J. Forlong, H. Savile, Harrison, Rason, Laborde, Spencer-Graves, and F. C. Baker; Lieut. Harvey; Messrs. Salmon, Ellis, the Hon. G. Digby, Cunningham-Graham, the Hon. A. Holland-Bibbert, and Windham, were present this week at the annual dinner of the officers of the Royal Alfred.

Admiral Lord Charles Scott, Commander-in-Chief at Devonport, laid the foundation stone on Monday last of the Kelly College Mission, St. Chad's, Devonport. This building is due to the munificence of the late Admiral Benedictus Marwood Kelly, the founder of that excellent educational establishment, the Kelly College, at Tavistock, which he originally intended for the use of the sons of naval officers, though the governing body afterwards wisely admitted boys whose parents could afford their sons a superior training. Admiral Kelly became Lieut., 1806; Commander, 1811; Captain, 1821; Rear-Admiral (retired), 1852; and Admiral, 1863. He died about four years afterwards. He was Midshipman of the Gibraltar in the expedition to Ferrol and Egypt, 1801 (medal), and the attack on the Island of Elba; Lieut. of the Adamant when she captured a Spanish frigate of 48 guns, and of the Dædalus at the capture of the Island of Samana, and two privateers, the crews of which he personally took with a detachment of bluejackets. This gallant old veteran, after fighting bravely for his king and country, left his estate to benefit the sons of his less fortunate brother officers.

The late Admiral Sir James Hope attempted to force the passage of the Peiho River at Taku, forty-one years ago on Monday next, and failed, losing eighty-one killed and 390 wounded, including himself among the latter. On August 21 in the following year he was successful, but a much larger force, both naval and military, was employed. The same forts have again been recaptured forty years afterwards.

The members of the Royal Navy Club 1765-85 dined at the Whitehall Rooms, Hotel Métropole, on the 19th inst., to commemorate Lord Howe's Victory (June 1, 1794). Rear-Admiral Sir Gerard H. W. Noel presided, and the guest of the evening was Major-General Sir John Ardagh. There were present:—

Admirals G. T. H. Boyes, R. N. Custance, W. McCoy, F. Castle, I. L. Hammett, Rt. Hon. Sir J. C. D. Hay, Bart., Sir Wm. B. Kennedy, R. G. Kinahan, Sir Lambton Loraine, Bart., W. H. Maxwell, Sir Erasmus Ommauney, W. H. C. St. Clair, T. Saumarez, C.B., T. Le Hunte Ward.

Captains J. R. Broadley, W. L. Kelham, H. B. King, Hon. J. T. Fitzmaurice, Chas. McLaughlin, George McArthur, A. G. Tate, H. H. Washington, C. R. Wood.

Commanders Hon. Cecil Cadogan, H. Colesworth, W. H. W. Grove, A. Hayes-Sadler, A. Haggard, and Fleet Paymaster E. M. Roe, R.N., Secretary.

Vice-Admiral Sir John Fisher's recent steam trials of the battleships under his command on passage from Gibraltar to Aranci Bay, for 800 miles at four-fifths power, were so satisfactory that a general signal was made to the captains expressing the gratification of the commander-in-chief at such creditable results. There were no breakdowns, and the Ramillies, flagship of the Rear-Admiral, was the slowest with an average of fourteen and a half knots. The squadron arrived at Castellamare on Wednesday, and Sir John Fisher entertained the naval, military, and civil officials on board the Renown. The salute was fired, and the ships dressed in honour of the Queen's Accession.

Rear-Admiral the Hon. J. S. Brand presided at a meeting of the Navy League, Victoria Street, S.W., on Saturday last, to consider the establishment of training-ships worked by joint committees of the County Councils and county boroughs on the south coast of England, to train young men as seamen for the mercantile marine, the vessels for which to be provided by the Government.

Rear-Admiral Lacon Hammett is mentioned as the second in command to Rear-Admiral Sir Gerard Noel during the coming manoeuvres, with his flag flying in the Sans Pareil.

Rear-Admiral J. A. T. Bruce, in the absence of Vice-Admiral Sir Edward Seymour with the Pekin Relief Column, commands the British naval forces off the Peiho River.

Captain the Hon. Hedworth Lambton, was entertained by the Anglo-African Writers' Club, at the Grand Hotel, on Monday last, and, in responding for himself and comrades, paid a graceful tribute to his brother officer, Captain E. P. Jones, of the Forté, for ably supporting General Sir Redvers Buller at Colenso, and the relief of Ladysmith with the naval guns. The value of the latter was not estimated by the enemy, neither did they take account of the assistance the Navy could render, and when it was brought to bear on them they were bitterly disappointed. On the following evening the gallant officer appeared before the Liberals of Newcastle, and was accorded a gratifying reception by the representatives of that borough.

Captain J. M. McQuhae has voluntarily retired two years before the compulsory age. Being fortieth on the active list of his rank, promotion was impossible in that period.

Captain Alvin C. Corry, who recently paid-off the Hood at Chatham, commissions the Camperdown, on the 5th prox., for Coastguard service at Rathmullen, North Ireland. The Devastation was named for this duty two years ago, but went to Gibraltar instead, and since then no vessel appears to have been available to protect that portion of the Irish Coast.

Captain Arthur C. Clarke, of the Undaunted, left Hong Kong on Saturday last for Wusung, in consequence of the serious disturbances in North China. But for the delay in completing his relief, the Argonaut, for sea, he would probably have been on his way home, as, in the ordinary course, that cruiser, having been commissioned on April 19 should ere this have been on the China station, instead of now lying in Chatham Reach with numerous dockyard men endeavouring to patch up her machinery.

Captain W. G. White, Transport Officer at Southampton, relieves Captain H. W. Onslow, of the Northampton, on the completion of the latter officer's period in command next month. Captain White, although forty-six years of age and, therefore, unlikely to attain active flag rank, has been fortunate in his appointments. Since returning from China as senior lieutenant of the Heroine in 1889, his only service at sea was on the Halcyon, 1895-96, and he now obtains a post that will keep him on the home station for three years.

Captain C. J. Barlow, Superintendent of the Pembroke Dockyard, officially inspected the Milford Haven docks and basins last week to ascertain if they could be utilised by our fleet, if necessary, for repairs and other requirements.

Captain John Denison, of the Melpomene, arrived at Portsmouth on Thursday in last week, and will pay off there after three years East Indian Service.

Captain H. C. B. Hulbert, of the Pelorus, left Simons Bay on Monday for Devonport, where he is due about the 23rd prox., and will call at St. Helena, Sierra Leone, and Las Palmas.

Commander Henry Preedy, paid off from the Torch, arrived home on Friday in last week from Sydney; N.S.W., in the P. and O. steamship Arcadia.

Commander Herbert Lyon, of the training-ship Curapca, was at Barnstaple Bay last week.

Lieut.-Commander the Hon. G. A. Hardinge, of the Rattler, arrived at Devonport from China on Monday last, and left on Wednesday for Sheerness to pay off that vessel, of which he has been in command nearly four years. As he obtained his present rank in 1885, promotion should not be far off. During his commission in the Far East he was stationed several months in the Peiho River, and was received in audience at the Imperial Court at Pekin.

Lieut. E. P. Powell, of the Coastguard at Greenock, who has headed the list of his rank for some time past, is now compulsorily retired. He served a considerable time in China, as Lieutenant, and would have undoubtedly obtained advancement had he not unfortunately been incapacitated for active service at sea.

Lieuts. A. J. Payne and C. W. McCulloch, appointed to the Monarch, and Surgeon M. H. Knapp, ordered to join the Doris, left Southampton on Saturday last in the Union-Castle steamship Tintagel Castle, for South Africa.

Lieut. R. W. Sumner, of the Thesus, is returning home in the steamship Cheshire from South Africa.

Surgeon A. R. Bankart, M.V.O., of the Osborne, who has been in medical attendance at Balmoral since the arrival of Her Majesty, was relieved on Saturday last by Sir James Reid, Bart., and returned to his duties on the Royal yacht.

Major and Brevet Lieut.-Colonel Grey Skipwith, R.M.L.I., who retired while serving at the Plymouth Division in May of last year, has presented the sergeants' mess of that headquarters with a valuable silver bowl.

Captain F. S. Gardner, R.M.L.I., of the Trafalgar, portguardship, Portsmouth, and Captain C. S. Watson, of the Repulse, Channel Squadron, have been allowed to exchange appointments.

Captain H. La T. Darley, R.M.L.I., who left the Edgar when she was paid off last Tuesday, will shortly proceed to the Royal Naval Barracks at Sheerness.

Navv Foreign.

Admiral Gervais, with his flag in the Bouvet, is to command the combined French squadron which is to manoeuvre in the Channel in August, in association with the mobilisation of a large military force in the Northern commands. The presence of the Mediterranean Squadron in the Channel is an event so remarkable as to attract a good deal of attention, and has set the alarmists talking. Notwithstanding the singularity of the circumstance, we are not disposed to assign any deep significance to the assembling of the two squadrons in the north. Doubtless, the French have in view some of the conditions which might be set up in case of war with this country, and perhaps of an attempt at invasion of England, but this is a matter which at present need give us no concern. Latterly the manoeuvres of the French squadrons have been uninteresting, and there is a wish to give a more important character to them in this year of the exhibition; and probably we shall learn almost as much from the manoeuvres as the French themselves. Admiral Gervais will arrive at Cherbourg with the combined squadrons on July 12.

The Mediterranean Squadron leaves Toulon at the end of this week for Mers-el Kébir, whence it will proceed to Les Trousses and La Pallice preparatory to meeting the Northern Squadron in view of the combined manoeuvres. The squadron is accompanied by the coast defence division, composed of the four ships of the Valmy class, with the torpedo transport Foudre. The Northern Squadron leaves Brest, and will meet that from the Mediterranean in the Bay of Biscay. Important operations are to take place both at Cherbourg and at Brest. It is ten years since the two squadrons operated together, being then under command of Vice-Admiral Charles Duperré, who, like Vice-Admiral Gervais, received a special commission for the time being as admiral, this being a rank which does not exist in the French navy.

The German Emperor signed the new German Navy Law at Homburg, in the Taunus Mountains, last week. His Majesty has replied individually to the various telegrams of congratulation on the passing of the measure. His message to the North German Lloyd, at Bremen, concludes as follows:—"Now, however, push on indefatigably, that the work begun be soon completed, and then we may command peace on the water as well." The words used are the subject of a good deal of comment in the Berlin papers, but the critics are mostly of opinion that the emphasis was not laid on the word "command" but on "peace." In a leading article on the passing of the Bill, the Novoe Vremya says:—

"In the present complications of political life, it is necessary for every Power that wishes to play an important rôle in the world to have a strong fleet. For example, what could Russia do at this moment in China if it did not possess a fleet? Every State must perpetually follow events as they occur, and be ready to demonstrate its power in any quarter of the globe. For this purpose, in most cases a fleet is necessary, and the more numerous and the stronger it is the better."

The Russian armoured cruiser Bayan has been launched at La Seyne, where she has been built by the Company of the Forges et Chantiers de la Méditerranée. She is the only ship of her class in the new Russian programme, being smaller than the Rossia, and altogether distinct from the several protected cruisers which are in hand at various places. She displaces 7,800 tons, and is 445ft. long with 57ft. beam and about 21ft. draught. She will be protected by 7-7in. steel at the water line. Her armament will comprise two 8in. breech-loaders, and eight 6in., twenty 2-9in., and seven 1-8in. quick-firers. Engines of 16,500 horse power supplied by Belleville boilers, are to give a speed of twenty-one knots. Many Russian officers who were present at the launch, including Rear-Admiral Rimsky-Korsakof, Captain Rodionof, and the commanders of the Standart, Khrabry, and a Russian yacht which is at Toulon. The Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Schwerin represented the Imperial Russian Family, and Admiral Fournier and all the chief naval, military, and civilian officials of Toulon were present.

The Ottoman Government has now evidently made up its mind to reconstruct the whole of the fleet available. The Messoudieh is now in hand at Messrs. Ansaldo's yard, Sampierdarena, near Genoa. It is stated that the German Emperor personally interested himself to secure the reconstruction of the Assar-i-Tewfik for the Germania yard, and she is now at Kiel. But the contract has now been signed with Messrs. Ansaldo for the reconstruction of the rest of the fleet. The Azizieh, Orkanieh, and Osmanieh are leaving Constantinople at once, and will be escorted by two transports, which will also have the Moukadmeh-i-Hair in tow, as she has no boilers on board. The other ships to be rebuilt are the Avni-illah, Feth-i-Boulend, Mahmoudieh, and Mouin-i-Zaffer, and these will follow as soon as the first four are safely at Sampierdarena. All of them are English-built, except the one to be towed. The armament is not yet decided on, but is to come from Krupp's.

The Norwegian coast defence armour-clad Eidsvold, a sister of the Norge, has been launched at Elswick. She displaces 3,850 tons, and is 290ft. long, with 50ft. 6in. beam, and 16ft. 6in. draught. Protection is given by a 6in. Harvey steel belt, 5in. on the turrets, and a 2in. deck. The armament comprises two 8-2in. breechloaders, six 5-9in., eight 12pr., and six 3pr. quick-firers, with two submerged torpedo tubes. Engines of 4,500 horse-power, supplied by Yarrow boilers, are to give a speed of 16-5 knots.

SERVICE MEMBERS' MEMORANDUM.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—My attention has been drawn to your editorial paragraph (16th inst.) commenting upon a single sentence in a memorandum submitted by the "Service members" to the Prime Minister. The sentence runs thus: "The relief of the Army from the duty of garrisoning purely naval ports and coaling stations abroad is a matter for special consideration."

Your comment, which compels me to trouble you with this, is as follows:—"This is in effect a reproduction of Sir John Colomb's scheme for improving the prospects of the senior officers of the Marine corps, which was tried with such disastrous results at Esquimalt." That in a single sentence, simply asserting that the matter requires special consideration, you see a "scheme," is creditable to your imagination; that you are able to detect in that declaratory sentence a deep and insidious design "for improving the prospects of the senior officers of the Marine corps," testifies to your ingenuity.

The exercise of your faculties of imagination and ingenuity is no business of mine except in relation to matters of fact concerning me personally. You must, therefore, permit me to point out that you are in error in attributing to me a "scheme for improving the prospects of the senior officers of the Marine corps." All I have done is to persistently advocate the application of the distribution of British war forces on the principles propounded by great admirals, and strongly urged by some of our greatest naval statesmen of the nineteenth century. If that scheme was for improving the prospects of the senior officers of the Marine corps, my history is shamefully at fault, for I have never discovered any evidence of the fact that Lord St. Vincent or Sir James Graham, for example, were more concerned in the prospects of senior Marine officers than in the defence of the Empire and the maintenance of its sea supremacy. Your assertion that the principle of this scheme was "tried at Esquimalt and with disastrous results" is entirely untrue.

The almost hysterical alarm this single sentence on the memorandum calls forth in your mind, and that of "R.N." to whom you refer, may perhaps be soothed by the reminder that in declaring the relief of the Army from the duty of garrisoning purely naval forts abroad is "a matter for special consideration," the Service Committee only echoes previous assertions by the present leaders of the Government and Opposition, and many who are, or have been, Her Majesty's advisers.

JOHN C. R. COLOMB.

House of Commons, 21st June.

A COURSE of instruction for adjutants and sergeant-majors of infantry battalions and depots will commence at Aldershot on the 3rd prox.

A SPECIAL Army Order announces that in lieu of ordinary pay at 4d. a day, issuable quarterly in arrear, and deferred pay at 2d. a day, issuable yearly in arrear, men of Sections B and C of the Army Reserve will in future receive a consolidated rate of pay at 6d. a day, which will be issued quarterly in arrear under the conditions now governing the issue of Army Reserve ordinary pay.

WANTED, A HEADDRESS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Whilst we are looking about for a new full headdress for our troops, why should not the War Office try the slouch hat worn so generally in the Colonies? This seems to possess many advantages over the helmet. It is lighter, can be more easily packed, and is more becoming in appearance. For the ordinary purposes of the Army it might do well, as it would protect the forehead and the back of the neck. The helmet is not over comfortable at the best of times, and when adorned with brass spike, plate, and chin chain, is very weighty. Those who have worn the slouch hat speak well of it. The only thing against it is that it is a practical head covering, suited to hot and cold weather alike. But surely, for once, common-sense might prevail at the War Office, Pall Mall. If only as a temporary measure it would be well to give it a trial. Why not issue it to all regiments in summer camps as an experiment? I cannot think that the expense would be very great, and it would be a great boon to all ranks in the hot summer weather to have something to wear which would protect them from the sun. I can speak from experience of the sad effects of the few hot days of this month on the men of my battalion doomed to do all their duties in fatigue caps. The doctors had enough to do attending to the sick. Such things ought not to be. There should be no difficulty in getting a supply of slouch hats, and I venture to think they would be regarded as a boon by those who, like myself, seem destined to pass what may be a hot summer under canvas. Depend upon it the Colonists would not have adopted this form of headdress unless it had advantages, and in these more practical days the question which should be asked by every good soldier is not whether the slouch hat is smart or soldierlike, but if it answers the purpose of a military headdress in being comfortable and inexpensive.

THE COLT AUTOMATIC
AND DUNDONALD GALLOPING
GUN-CARRIAGE.

Colt Automatic Guns, taking the English Service ammunition of
303 calibre, and mounted on DUNDONALD GALLOPING CAR-RIAGES, are now being largely used in South Africa, both by Imperial and Colonial troops.

The Dundonald Carriage carries 2,000 rounds of ammunition, loaded in belts ready for immediate use, and is protected by patent armour plate.
The Carriage can be taken into action by one man and horse, and can be unlim-bered and brought into action within the space of thirty seconds, the Colt Gun being then ready to pour out a stream of bullets at the rate of over 450 rounds per minute, or less if required.

The Dundonald Galloping Ammunition Cart is constructed to carry either 7,000 or 10,500 rounds, loaded in belts and ready for transfer to the Colt Guns at a moment's notice. This also can be galloped into action and unlimbered with the same speed as the Gun Carriage, and therefore forms a most valuable adjunct to the Colt Gun and Dundonald Carriage.

The Dundonald General Service Cart. Specially
adapted for South African Service. The lightest, strongest, most serviceable
Two-wheeled Cart made. Constructed with a Steel Frame and Hide Bottom.
Carries over 1,000 lbs. of Baggage, contains over 100 cubic feet covered space,
weighs about 600 lbs.

MILITARY OPERATIONS IN THE ORANGE RIVER COLONY.

THE South African war has entered on a new phase, and the operations commencing in the Orange River Colony have a peculiar interest from their unique character. The danger to the communications that has existed since the early days of April, when five companies of British infantry were captured near Reddesburg, has gradually become accentuated to a degree constituting it a positive peril, demanding the immediate attention of the Commander-in-Chief. Lord Roberts has, in consequence, since his defeat of Commandant-General Botha on the 11th, 12th, and 13th inst., stayed his hand as regards operations further to the east of Pretoria, and while securing his position there and in the western provinces of the Transvaal, has directed a general enveloping movement of all troops that could be spared towards the north-eastern area of the Orange River Colony, where ex-President Steyn and Commandant De Wet still hold the field with forces sufficiently formidable to make it essential that they should be speedily crushed, if the war now being waged by the Boers on Lord Roberts's communications is to be brought to an end.

With this object in view, Sir Redvers Buller, with a considerable part of the Natal Army Corps, has been brought up the south-eastern line to Standerton, and Heidelberg, further to the west on the same line, has been occupied by Generals Hunter and Ian Hamilton. With these commanders in touch with one another, the Boer forces south of the Vaal, now declared to be rebels, will be cut off from those in the Transvaal, who still enjoy the superior status of "belligerents." The successful carrying out of this movement is of the utmost importance, because the northern districts, although inclined to accept British rule, have been much disturbed by the successes of De Wet in the south, and from the same cause General Botha has stiffened his back, and broken off his negotiations with Lord Roberts, which would probably have led to his surrender with all his force.

As the various columns detailed for the converging movements advance towards the centres whence Steyn and De Wet have been making their bold and skilful sallies, it will become difficult to localise them. On Saturday, General Ian Hamilton occupied Heidelberg, the enemy flying before him. On the previous day General Broadwood's cavalry had a skirmish there with a commando, which they dispersed. Colonel Mahon left Ian Hamilton's column at Springs, and arrived at Pretoria on Tuesday. Sir Archibald Hunter with Barton's Brigade advanced on Sunday from Johannesburg, also to Heidelberg, whence he marched on Wednesday towards Frankfort, in temporary command of Ian Hamilton's column. Generals Pole-Carew's and Tucker's Divisions, with French's cavalry, form the garrisons of Pretoria and Johannesburg. General Baden-Powell with General Hutton and Colonel Plumer, hold Rustenberg, in the neighbourhood of which place General Hutton recently had the good fortune in a skirmish to capture two of the enemy's guns, a rare occurrence in this war, as nothing has been more remarkable than the skill with which the Boers have withdrawn their artillery when worsted in action. General Smith-Dorrien was lately at Vredefort west of the railway, and the line to the east is guarded at Bloemfontein, Heilbron, Senekal, Rhenoster, Kroonstad, and Lindley by the troops under Generals Kelly-Kenny, Colville, Clements, Lord Methuen, Knox, and Paget, respectively. To the south and south-east the strategical encircling line is taken up and completed by the cordon of Generals Rundle and Brabant, passing west and north from the border of Basutoland at Ficksburg. The effective Boer forces still in the field are estimated at from 15,000 to 20,000, of which about two-thirds are south of the Vaal, divided into four commandoes under Piet and Christian De Wet, Limmer, and Olivier. Such is the present situation.

When Sir Redvers Buller crossed the threshold of the Transvaal, the alternatives of either operating against the Boers retreating on Ermelo with a view to seizing the Lourenco Marques Railway, or of working to the north-west along the line to Johannesburg, lay before him. The former course would have had the advantage of bringing matters in the Transvaal to a crisis earlier by cutting off the forces still following Commandant-General Botha from their source of supply at Lourenco Marques, and hastening the end of the struggle. But, as no railway exists in the direction indicated, Sir Redvers would have been dependent on wheel transport for his entire marching force, a condition of things that would probably have sufficed of itself to render the undertaking impracticable. Moreover, the advance along the north-western railway, besides affording easy means of transport for the impedimenta of the force, opened the way to secure two distinct objects, each of great importance. The first of these was a second line of communications between Pretoria and the sea for the British forces, and the other was the isolation of Mr. Steyn and his burghers, and the prevention of further communication between the remnants of the Boer armies still in arms in the Transvaal and the Orange River Colony. Lord Roberts accordingly decided that Sir Redvers Buller should follow the latter course, which had the further advantage of bringing the bulk of the Natal Army Corps into closer touch with his own army for the operations necessitated by the continuance of the struggle south of the Vaal. On the 22nd inst. the infantry of Sir Redvers Buller's column halted after a march of twenty-two miles at Kattbosch Spruit, about six miles south-east of Standerton, which place had on the same day been occupied unopposed by Lord Dundonald's cavalry. On the following day the 2nd Infantry Division arrived there, and the British flag was hoisted once more. The enemy had evacuated the town, leaving behind a large amount of rolling stock. On the passage of the British column along the line a Boer commando, 1,000 strong, from Wakkerstroom took up a position flanking the railway at Gras Kop north-west of Volksrust, and fifteen miles from Sand Spruit Station. The presence of this force constitutes a distinct menace to the communications, and we are not surprised to learn, notwithstanding the precautions said to have been taken by Sir Redvers Buller, that on Tuesday a construction train left the line outside Platrand Station, situated to the west of Sand Spruit, owing to the rails having been loosened.

The series of successes that have attended De Wet's raids on the railway south of the Vaal have been somewhat disquieting. Lord Roberts's ability to cope with the situation cannot be doubted, but each day that this intrepid Boer commander retains his power of doing mischief increases the bad effects caused by his achievements, not alone among the burghers, but also among the Basutos, a number of whom, acting as a working party, were killed, or captured with the Derbyshire Militia at Rhenoster River on the 7th inst. From Leeuw Spruit, ten miles north of Roodeval, to Winburg Road Station, a stretch to the south of 100 miles, the line has been raided and cut at various points, and heavy losses in killed, wounded, and prisoners have been inflicted on the garrisons guarding it. It is now known that the 13th Battalion of Yeomanry fell helplessly into De Wet's toils at Lindley, which they carelessly entered supposing Lord Methuen to be still holding the town, and Lord Roberts, in a despatch of the 25th inst, has reported the capture near Heilbron on the 4th inst. of a convoy of fifty waggons with its escort of 160 men of the Highland Brigade. On the 14th, during the raid on the line at the Zand River a mail train with 2,000 bags of letters for the troops fell into the enemy's hands. On the 22nd the post at Honing Spruit, north of Kroonstad, was attacked and three culverts burned before reinforcements could arrive, and Lord Roberts has reported another attempt on the line at Roodeval Spruit on Wednesday, in which the enemy were easily beaten off. Again, on Sunday, General Clements was engaged with the enemy as far south as Winburg, where he had gone for supplies and guns preparatory to acting in combination with columns from Lindley, Heilbron, and Heidelberg. It is satisfactory to know that the enemy were driven off with loss to the north of the Zand River, as their presence in the south could not fail to intensify the danger still existing. It is possible that the unsuccessful attack on a small British force on Monday, north of Senekal, reported by Lord Roberts, was made by this commando. The facts here recorded are not pleasant to contemplate at a time when military requirements in other quarters of the globe may become pressing. It is satisfactory, however, to learn that there is no intention of withdrawing troops from South Africa while affairs there remain in their present unsettled condition.

Notwithstanding the vigilance and good dispositions of General Rundle, there is reason to fear that small parties of the enemy have eluded his posts and passed south towards Thaba N'chu and Ladybrand. On the 19th inst. he had a skirmish with the enemy on his left, and moved his camp across the Bloem Spruit to a less exposed position. The British forces forming the retaining cordon to the south are posted in camps three miles apart watching the Boer positions which are of great natural strength. Colonel Dalgety, on the 21st, surrounded a body of the enemy at Hibernia, and would have captured them, but his only gun having got damaged he retired, and they escaped. Heavy cannonading was heard throughout Saturday from Maseru in the direction of Hammonia. On the 22nd, Rundle, sweeping round towards his left, was at Rietpan, six miles south-west of Senekal. The Colonials and Yeomanry came in contact with the enemy, who, after a skirmish, fell back on their main position. The character of the war throughout has been largely influenced by the bearing of the principal railway lines and by the nature of the country. The one has determined the directions to be given to advancing columns, the amount of wheel-transport to be provided, and composition and disposition of the troops. The latter has caused the war to drift steadily from west to east, where it is now localised for its last stand, the western districts both of the Orange River Colony and of the Transvaal being comparatively flat veldt, badly watered, while the eastern portions are rugged and mountainous tracts interspersed with wide and fertile valleys, capable of sustaining large bodies of men, and affording an endless choice of strong positions almost impregnable from their very nature.

THE new rifle ranges which have been in course of construction at Holmstone Camp, Lydd, for the past few months were opened on Saturday last by Mrs. Parr, wife of Major-Gen. Hallam Parr, commanding the South-Eastern District, who was also present.

Army Notes.

Mr. Balfour did well and wisely in giving a day to discussion of the revelations made by Mr. Burdett-Coutts and others with regard to the hospital arrangements in South Africa. Not for a long time has such a sensation been caused as was occasioned by the strictures passed on the medical and nursing establishment at the front by Mr. Burdett-Coutts in the Times on Wednesday. The Government, however, we are glad to see, shows no desire to shirk the matter, in this respect comparing favourably with the administration of 1855, whose refusal to grant an inquiry into "the condition of the Army before Sebastopol, and into the conduct of those departments of the Government whose duty it was to minister to the wants of the Army," many of our older readers, at least, will remember. Happily, the conditions in South Africa do not seem at all comparable with the state of affairs in the Crimea, though Mr. Burdett-Coutts makes them out bad enough in all conscience. It is to the medical arrangements at Kroonstad that he draws particular attention, and it is a truly pitiable picture that he paints. On the night of April 28 when Sir William MacCormac and Mr. Treves were telling the Reform Club how perfectly the medical arrangements were working in South Africa, hundreds of men, he says, were lying in the worst stages of typhoid with only a blanket and a thin waterproof sheet between their aching bodies and the hard ground; with no milk and hardly any medicines, without beds, stretchers or mattresses, without pillows, without linen of any kind, without a single nurse among them, with only a few ordinary private soldiers and only three doctors to attend on 350 patients. This, be it remembered, was a month after the occupation of Bloemfontein, and if things were as Mr. Burdett-Coutts portrays, there must have been something very much amiss with the organisation of the medical service in South Africa. When we say this we do not at all impeach the veracity of Sir William MacCormac and Mr. Treves in the account they gave of how they found the hospitals working; they were concerned with the treatment of the wounded rather than with the cases of fever and disease, and though the surgical attendance itself in the later stages of the war seem to have left something to be desired, the breakdown has not been on a par with the inadequate arrangements made for the fever patients.

The lack of proper organisation seems to have occurred rather in South Africa than at home if we are to accept the statement made by the Government. Nominally, of course, the responsibility in that case would rest with Lord Roberts, and he for his part makes it clear that he is quite ready to bear the blame. But in no quarter is there any disposition to cause him to bear the burden. He has had his hands quite full enough without having to give personal superintendence to the provisions for the sick and wounded. The difficulties he had to contend with, moreover, were well nigh insuperable. He admits that on the arrival of the troops at Kroonstad the accommodation available proved quite insufficient for the sick and wounded on his hands. Bloemfontein and Paardeberg had both played sad havoc in the ranks. The difficulty of increasing what accommodation he had must have been very great, for, as he points out, the very existence of the army depended upon supplies coming up by train on a line of railway 900 miles long, every bridge of which for the last 128 miles had been destroyed by the enemy. Still, we cannot but think there must have been something wanting in the organisation of the nursing and medical arrangements somewhere on the line between Lord Roberts and Cape Town. The interior of one of the field hospitals outside Bloemfontein, as described by Mr. Burdett-Coutts, makes this only too apparent. "Typhoid cases were lying closely packed together, the dying against the convalescent, the man in his 'crisis' pressed against the man hastening to it. . . . There was no linen; only the coarse rug grated against the sensitive skin burning with fever." This should not have been. We welcome the suggestion made by Lord Roberts, and approved by the Government, that a small committee, consisting of one or two medical men of recognised ability in whom the public have full confidence, together with some men of "sound common-sense," should be deputed to proceed to South Africa in order to inquire into and furnish a full report on the working of the medical arrangements throughout the war. It may be that the breakdown in the arrangements was unavoidable. But if not, the public will demand to know who is to blame, and this they never will do until the inquiry is instituted.

The debate which took place in the House of Commons last night did not throw very much new light on the subject. Mr. Burdett-Coutts admitted that the hospital he described was the worst one he visited, but he stood by his main contentions unflinchingly. Mr. Wyndham defended the War Office with his customary ability and made out the best case he could for the authorities. He did not attempt to deny that the wounded and sick in South Africa have been exposed to terrible hardships, but he maintained that such hardships were inevitable, and had been common to every campaign. He brought home to the House more vividly than even Lord Roberts's telegram had done the terrible difficulties of transport and organisation connected with an army operating over a vast expanse of country. He showed, too, that more hospital accommodation than Lord Roberts himself considered necessary had been sent out. The statistics he deduced in support of his contention that the percentage of deaths in cases of enteric fever entered in the hospitals at Bloemfontein was lower than in the Soudan and other campaigns would have been more convincing if the climates had been similar. More telling were the figures he gave showing the extent to which the personnel and appliances of the Medical Corps had been increased between the months of January and June. These absolutely disposed of the myth that since the disasters of "Black Week" the War Office had largely increased the strength of the army in South Africa without making any corresponding increase in the medical arrangements for dealing with the sick and wounded. Mr. Wyndham's speech made it clear that, with one exception, it has not been to any lack of supplies, but rather owing to the difficulties of distributing the same in South Africa that the painful state of affairs revealed by Mr. Burdett-Coutts is due. The exception we refer to was the supply of female nurses. It is evident, we think, that the Army has not been in this respect as well served as it might have been by the authorities at home. We fear, too, that the organisation of the medical and nursing service in South Africa has left much to be desired. In saying this we make all allowance for the difficulties of keeping a field hospital in touch with an army on the march in a country deficient alike in roads and railways. But it cannot be overlooked that the particular hospital to which Mr. Burdett-Coutts has called attention, though a field hospital in name, was to all intents and purposes a stationary hospital, and it was days, nay, weeks, after Lord Roberts entered Bloemfontein that the state of affairs to which publicity has been given was existing. Who is to blame for the disorganisation that has been revealed, it will be for the committee of inquiry to discover. We hope, with Lord Roberts, that the result of that inquiry will be to ameliorate the condition of the sick and wounded in the future.

It is impossible to disguise the very unpleasant fact that in its treatment of all questions affecting the Medical Staff of the Army, the War Office has for years past been lamentably deficient in foresight, and if it now stands condemned it has only itself to blame. A few weeks ago a staff officer, writing to us from Bloemfontein, spoke of the "almost herculean efforts which the medical officers are making to combat disease," but deplored that "these heroes of the hospital and the battle-field have been so cruelly slighted and depreciated." He went on to say, "There is no disguising that there has been a want of proper understanding not only at the War Office, but in the Army too, of the functions and great responsibilities of the military doctor, and to this in a large measure the deplorable condition of affairs here existing is due. A truer, better fellow and better soldier than the average Army doctor could not be found; but the policy of all has been to snub him—keep him in his place—and so our poor suffering soldiers are the victims. God help them! I do hope when this war is over all will combine to put an end to these paltry differences, and that enlightened military opinion will take the lead, for it cannot be good for any army when such pettiness of spirit is displayed. Officers in high authority are doing their utmost to combat the evil, which all sensible men must deplore." The officer who wrote thus was one who was in position to speak. His views ought to carry some weight at the present moment. It has been so much the custom to pronounce the Army medical officers as a "grumbling lot" because they were not satisfied that all was as it should be; because they appealed to the better judgment of War Office officials to provide the equipment necessary for the conduct of extensive military operations, that failure of organization was inevitable. A big war was necessary to open the eyes of Government officials generally to the error of their ways. The War Office has just now to bear a weighty burden of responsibility. But what can be said for that other department in Downing Street which places every conceivable difficulty in its way, and those ministers who have invariably supported successive Chancellors of the Exchequer in his efforts to produce popular budgets? Are they to go off scot free? A practical people such as we may claim to be would do well to ask themselves: Is it fair to harness one horse only and then complain because the team does not show itself capable of performing the task required of it? Knowing as we do the enormous difficulties under which the military authorities frequently labour, we are not so disposed as some may be to join in the general chorus of condemnation of the War Office, great as its sins may be—and, we think, are—in some respects.

We published last week the general order issued by the War Office on the subject of the gratuity—£5—which is to be issued to Colonial troops proceeding to their homes, either medically unfit or at the termination of their engagement. The order stated that "this gratuity will be in addition to the gratuity, if any, given to the troops at the end of the war." The publication of the Army order has caused many correspondents to write to us for information as to the course which the War Office proposes to adopt with regard to the general reward for those who have taken part in the campaign in South Africa. We are assured that this question has not yet arisen, but that when it does the War Office authorities will do all in their power to bring about a satisfactory settlement. Unfortunately the fact is sometimes overlooked that the military authorities are not the chief offenders when in such matters there is a want of liberality. They are not the guardians of the public purse, and every sovereign spent by them has first to be obtained from the Treasury. Up to the present time it would be quite impossible for them even to approach the Treasury on the subject of a general bounty. That can only be done when the fighting is over, and the heads of the Financial Department can form some reasonable estimate of the amount required. The War Office, as the department immediately concerned, is too sensible, we are assured, of the splendid work done by officers and men in South Africa to forget the claims they have on the gratitude of the public, but it will rest with the Treasury to decide how far the National Exchequer can be drawn upon for the purposes of the grant which it is usual to make on the close of a war to those who have, at great sacrifice, upheld the honour of their country in the field. In the present instance there ought to be no attempt at cheeseparing, for the work has been of an exceptionally rough character, the operations have extended for months, and the casualties have been enormous, whilst the gallantry of the Army has been placed beyond question.

On the report stage of the Military Lands Bill on Thursday night a rather interesting discussion took place in the House of Lords on the subject of the provision of suitable rifle ranges for Volunteers. The supply in the past has been ridiculously inadequate, but the War Office at last seems to be waking up to the necessity of doing something more for the force. Last year Lord Lansdowne devoted £40,000 to the provision of local ranges, and this year he has set aside a further £100,000. When this comes to be allocated the authorities hope Volunteers will have no further difficulty in obtaining rifle practice. Of course, some of them will still have to travel by rail for such practice, but it will not, be as hitherto, at their own expense. Some of the corps, too, are to be recouped for some of the expense they have incurred in providing their own ranges. We note, too, that many local bodies seem disposed to assist the Government in this important work. Some exception was taken in the debate on the Bill to throwing any of the cost on the rates. With that, however, we are not concerned. We assume the County Councils know their own business best, and if they are disposed, as they evidently are, to contribute towards the expenses of the ranges, the Volunteers will certainly not refuse their aid.

The Volunteers Bill has now passed through committee and only awaits third reading before being sent down to the Lower Chamber. During the passage of the Bill through the Grand Committee of the House of Peers, a rather important change was made in its provisions. The principal proposal contained in the measure is one permitting the Volunteers to be called out in times of "imminent national danger or great emergency." The substitution of these words for the old proviso enacting that they should be called up only in the event of "actual or apprehended invasion of any part of the United Kingdom" has been generally approved. But in the Bill, as originally drafted, the reform was not retrospective. It was eminently undesirable that there should be two classes of Volunteers with different liabilities, and acting on the advice of Volunteer commanding officers, Lord Lansdowne has struck out the words providing that the alteration in the liability to service should "not apply to any Volunteer enrolled before the first day of June, 1900, except with his consent." This amendment was generally approved when the Bill came to be considered in the Upper House on Thursday night. Renewed exception, however, was taken to the proposal to invite all Volunteers willing to serve in emergency outside the United Kingdom to enter what is called a Special Service Corps. Both Lord Monkswell and Lord Kimberley repeated the arguments raised on the second reading against this proposal. We think, however, that the case made out by the Secretary of State in its support was conclusive. The Volunteers have come forward in a most patriotic manner with offers of service in South Africa, but it would obviously have been a great convenience to the War Office if they could have known beforehand exactly how much aid they could have looked for in this direction. We are quite prepared to admit that strong arguments can be deduced by those who are of a contrary way of thinking. But it must be remembered that Volunteers need not necessarily undertake to go on foreign service. Such undertaking will be purely voluntary on their part, and if, after joining the Special Service Corps they should desire to rid themselves of the liability no obstacle will be placed in their way. Surely a permissive measure of this kind can do no harm. The War Office has been informed that many Volunteers are ready and anxious to avail themselves of it, and the commanding officers of Volunteers do not object to them doing so. Such being the case, we hope the Bill will pass into law. There is one danger which the Institute of Commanding Officers of Volunteers have drawn attention to, which will have to be avoided. No attempt must be made to separate companies willing to go on foreign service from those who are unwilling or unable to do so, nor should any distinctive mark be given them. Lord Lansdowne, however, seems quite alive to this, and will, we are sure, do nothing to injure the Volunteer Service in any way.

If England blundered into the South African War, the whole civilised world has blundered into war with China. Diplomacy calls it by another name; but, with massacre, murder, and rapine stalking through the land, the day of sophistries is done, and things are seen in all their hideous reality. Apparently the Powers have been so busily engaged in trying to secure a generous portion of the leviathan's inheritance that they forgot the leviathan. So far from being dead, as they have all along taken for granted, he seems to be very much alive, and boiling with fanatical passion such as northern races can hardly conceive. The corpse, on which they have been preying, has suddenly risen up a powerful monster, of whose strength they are ignorant. Even Russia, unless Count Muravieff's last words are fiction, is as much surprised at the turn events are taking as any of her rivals. Our mistaken estimate of the Boer last year was wisdom compared to the mistaken estimate of the Chinese we share with Europeans and Americans this year: for, after all, the Celestial has a civilisation of his own, great traditions, and independence. He cares little for his life, and when fairly well led he makes an admirable soldier. But the "Boxers" are a rabble, and the regulars are not much better. Nevertheless they appear to possess unlimited ammunition, besides large numbers of Krupp, Creusot, and Maxim guns. Moreover, their gunners are trained men, and signs are not wanting that Li Hung Chang persuaded European mercenaries to undertake military duties in China. These are by no means welcome discoveries, which should have been known before Admiral Seymour started from Tien-tsin. That the regulars and the "Boxers" have joined forces seems to be regarded as criminal on their part; but on the whole the alliance is not so unholy in the Celestial mind as an alliance between the Chinese Army and the Powers, which, under such euphemisms as "leases," "agreements," and "concessions," has been robbing the Empire of its independence. Let us clear our minds of cant, and see things as they are. Fortunately the logic of events is forcing truth to the front in China as elsewhere. The foreign critics who were so recently condemning our action in South Africa must be sorry now that they spoke so soon.

The Navy has been asked to undertake military operations once too often. Though Mr. Goschen tried to minimise its significance, the Chinese situation, so far as this country is concerned, reflects no credit on the Government. What are the facts of the case? The British Fleet on the China Station represents England's power and influence in the Far East, its strength being in proportion to its preponderance over that of any other Power. By a fortunate chance, too, Admiral Seymour, a name to conjure with in China, was the senior officer on the station, and, therefore, took precedence of all the other European commanding officers. When the urgency of the danger at Peking necessitated the landing of a naval force to march inland eighty miles, he himself took the lead, though by so doing he left the Russian admiral in the premier position at sea. As seniority on land, where the forces of the Powers are numerically weak, is bound eventually to pass to a military officer, not necessarily British, our naval superiority is completely nullified. Not only has the admiral occupied a position of the utmost danger, but the ships of the fleet have been robbed of their crews. When it is remembered that for some time the real strength of the Powers will lie in their squadrons, and that in international complications the strength of this country always lies in the Navy, the situation is certainly peculiar. Without doubt the Navy has rendered valuable service to the Empire. In all our great wars, and in most of our smaller campaigns, but it has either acted in concert with the Army or its operations have been confined to the seaboard. Peking is eighty miles from the coast, and there is no British force in the city. In the whole course of our naval history it may be doubted if a parallel case can be found for the despatch of a Naval Brigade in such circumstances as those existing in China at the present moment. Perhaps the nearest is Nelson's move to aid the Neapolitans, but it was strongly condemned by the Admiralty, and the conditions were infinitely more favourable to success in his case than in Admiral Seymour's.

The fine spirit of chivalry which invests our military annals with the fairest flowers of Christianity has revealed itself in a new form. No one who reads it can forget the gallantry and devotion to duty of Q Battery R.H.A. at Sanna's Post when forming part of the captured convoy. The surprise of our men was so complete, the position so dangerous, and the preparations of the Boers so admirable, that absolute surrender seemed inevitable. But with magnificent coolness and resource Major Phipps-Hornby, commanding the battery, saved four guns and covered the retreat of that part of the convoy which escaped. Lord Roberts, having decided that conspicuous heroism had been shown collectively, directed that one officer was entitled to wear the Victoria Cross, one non-commissioned officer, one gunner and one driver, the individuals to be chosen by ballot. After the Persian invasion there was just such a ballot in Greece, and every hero voted the palm of valour for himself. But Q Battery, which displayed unflinching courage in the field, showed also that it possessed the finest quality of chivalry. There were only two officers who took part in the work of saving the guns, and they each voted for the other, the Commander-in-Chief naturally deciding in favour of the senior, Major Phipps-Hornby. In the same way Sergeant Parker, Gunner Lodge, and Driver Glasscock were elected by their comrades. The incident reflects as much glory on the recipients of the Cross as on those who elected them to the honour. Q Battery, R.H.A., will be honoured for all time to come, as it deserves to be, in the Royal Regiment of Artillery.

The black man in North-East Africa does not bear the "white man's burthen" without kicking, any more than the coloured brethren generally in other places. The chiefs who exercise their sovereign rights of raiding their neighbours without the sanction of the authorities in the East African Protectorate meet with swift punishment; and the East Africa Rifles which were reorganised eighteen months ago by specially selected officers have been doing very useful and trying work in bringing the tribes to order near the line of railway to Uganda. There are eighteen British officers now serving in the corps, which is stationed in detachments spread over a wide area, and the rank and file have proved satisfactory, especially the Soudanese from Egypt, some of whom fought against Kitchener's army at Atbara. Major Souter, Cameron Highlanders, has done excellent work in getting the regiment into good order, his varied experience having proved of the utmost value. All the officers, with one exception, belong to infantry regiments, and they have generally co-operated with zeal and effect in drilling their companies, and have gained valuable experience in the service of the Protectorate in the management of native tribes; and even the troublesome Masai have enlisted in the East Africa Rifles. By the last mail a punitive expedition, under the command of Captain Longfield, 3rd Dragoon Guards, had returned to Fort Smith after a successful march against a chief named Bogo, who, with his allies in the Waki-kunu country, had been raiding and murdering his neighbours. The little force encountered great difficulties on their way, marching by night through immense forests over a country cut up by numerous streams from the mountains, and occasional swamps, till they reached Bogo's villages, which they burned. The chief escaped, but some forty of his followers were killed, twelve were made prisoners, and 200 head of cattle were captured. The column lost nine men wounded, of whom two died.

They seem to understand the question of rewards better in Russia than we do here. A telegram from the Russian capital on Tuesday stated that, "For conspicuous bravery at the capture of the Taku forts the Czar has conferred the fourth class of the Order of St. George on Captain Dobrowolski, commander of the Russian gunboat Bobr, who commanded the combined squadron; Captain Sillman, commanding the gunboat Koreietz; and Lieuts. Szarytsheff, Dedeneff, and Titoff. The insignia of the fourth class of the Military Order are bestowed upon four petty officers of each gunboat and upon four men of the landing parties. The same insignia are conferred upon four men of the 12th Siberian Rifle Regiment, which took part in the storming of the forts. Lieut. Stankiewicz of that regiment receives the Order of St. George of the fourth class." Months perhaps will elapse before the heroes of the Ladysmith siege receive any acknowledgement of their gallantry and devotion, notwithstanding that the general who was in chief command has been in England for weeks. Everything in our Army must run on red tape lines. The Russians better understand the feelings of soldiers. We are satisfied even to go back to the order of things which prevailed in the early part of the century, and we are not even so up-to-date as we were at the time of the Crimean War, for then successive Honours Gazettes appeared. In view of the promptitude with which the officials of the Czar have acted, our procedure does appear a little grandmotherly, to say the least.

To the Queen's Westminster Volunteers belongs the credit of inaugurating what is not unlikely to become a recognised head-dress in the British Army. That regiment paraded in their new slouch hats on Saturday last for inspection, over 1,400 strong, in fourteen companies of infantry with a squadron of mounted infantry and a hundred cyclists. The generals upon the ground, as well as the inspecting officer (Colonel Fludyer) declared that they presented a magnificent sight, and as perfect in every respect as it was possible for a regiment to be. There are five officers and 144 men of the corps at the front.

The Reserves Forces Bill and the Military Manœuvres Bill both passed their third reading in the House of Lords on Thursday. They have still, of course, to run the gauntlet of the Lower Chamber, but it is not expected that any serious opposition will be made to them.

Major-General Sir Frederick Maurice is a firm believer in the military cyclist. Being so he is anxious to turn the "wheelman" to good account, if he can, in connection with our system—when we get one—of home defence. General Maurice estimates the number of available male cyclists in the United Kingdom at fully a million. "Why," he has asked himself, "should not an effort be made to organise them, or such of them as will undertake military service, in a special corps for the purposes of defence?" If only a fair proportion could be induced to enrol themselves as riflemen, a large force of a very mobile character would become available, which the General would use to "hang on the skirts of an invading army and hamper its advance." There is one point in favour of the cyclist. We all know the difficulty which is experienced in finding range accommodation. This the wheelman would, in a large measure, overcome, for he on his machine could easily go fifty miles to do his rifle practice. A section could take the road together and practice outpost duty on the way to and from the range. All these points are in favour of Sir Frederick Maurice's scheme, which is to be put to a practical test on the August Bank Holiday, while it is proposed to utilise the preceding Saturday and Sunday for the purpose of training the thirty-nine cyclist sections of the Metropolitan Volunteers. General Maurice intends to call together the commanding officers and explain the general scheme to them, which has received the sanction of the War Office, and then ascertain how many men are likely to be available for the experiment. The country over which the operations will take place is that through which the two main roads from Shoreham and Brighton pass to London. There are in this area twenty-four roads which run to the front of the invaders' advance, if it be conducted within these limits, and the group of these which lead directly from the Metropolis to Brighton would be those on which the cyclists would be employed. On every road a cyclist body will take up a position whence, themselves concealed, they can bring an unexpected fire to bear on the advancing enemy, and pursue him with it after he is driven back. One point that has to be practically ascertained is the number of men who can conveniently work on a single road, deploy for fighting, and get back to their cycles without confusion. This General Maurice puts at three hundred. It is certainly worth trying whether it is not possible to organise for defensive purposes the latent strength of the cyclist clubs and cyclist sections of the Volunteers. General Maurice is to be commended, for his "plan of campaign" seems destined to develop into something very practical which will add materially to the fighting strength of the Volunteer force.

Lord Dundonald has been promoted a Major-General at last to command a cavalry brigade in South Africa, but only from March 7. Surely it was on February 28 that Lord Dundonald marched into Ladysmith at the head of the relieving force of cavalry, which he had commanded with such admirable skill. It does seem rather a strange way of recognising the services of a successful leader, to rob him of the pay and allowance of a rank because presumably red tape demanded that the interests of the taxpayer should be duly guarded. What makes the treatment meted out to Lord Dundonald the less difficult to understand is the fact that he is ten years senior as a Colonel to Major-General Brocklehurst, who was commanding the cavalry in the besieged town. General Brocklehurst is a most capable leader and well upheld his high reputation throughout the siege. No one would desire for a moment to say one word to his injury. The system, however, appears rather an absurd one which gave to the junior the rank of Major-General in October, and denies the same to an officer ten years his senior for seven days after he had led the way into the town the relief of which people had been so anxiously awaiting for weeks and months. Apparently, Lord Dundonald was a Colonel only all the time that he was so ably discharging the duties of Cavalry Brigade under Sir Redvers Buller. Of course, from the official standpoint, it is all right. Lord Dundonald did not actually go out in command of a brigade from England, and, according to the procedure of the circumlocution department, he may consider himself lucky to be a Major-General at all. But at the end of the nineteenth century one would scarcely expect to find so much haggling over details to the injury of a brave soldier who has been fighting his country's battles in face of an admittedly formidable enemy.

INSTRUCTIONS have been given for steps to be taken to prevent soldiers from writing to heads of departments at the War Office in respect to grievances under which they suppose themselves to suffer.

THE EVELYN WOOD COMPETITION.—The preliminary stage of the Evelyn Wood Competition came off at Aldershot on Wednesday, with the result that nine teams are qualified to enter for the final test at Bisley:—A Co. 2nd Highland Light Infantry, 149 points; C Co. 1st Royal Lancaster Regiment, 144; E Co. 1st Royal Home Counties Reserve, 117; D Co. 1st Royal Lancaster, 113; E Co. 1st Royal Lancaster, 109; G Co. Highland Light Infantry, 106; F Co. Highland Light Infantry, 96; B Co. 1st Royal Lancaster, 93; and A Co. 1st Royal Lancaster, 93.

THE ARMY RIFLE ASSOCIATION.—The Army Sixty Meeting will take place on Butts 18 and 19, at Bisley, on Thursday and Friday next, and competitors must report themselves on the range, at the 200 yards firing point, at 9 a.m. each day. Shooting will commence each morning at 9.20 a.m. sharp. Ammunition will be issued free to competitors, and only that so issued will be allowed to be used. The Bisley meeting commences on Monday, July 9, and the United Service Cup Match is fired on Friday, July 20. The Methuen Cup will be shot for at Bisley (Butts 18 and 19) on Saturday next, commencing at 2.30 p.m. The following teams have, so far, entered:—H.M.S. Excellent, the Royal Engineers, the Royal Marine Artillery, the Royal Marine Light Infantry, English Regiments, the School of Musketry, and the Green Jackets.

The Duke of Cambridge, who has now been 40 years honorary colonel of the London Rifle Brigade, was present last Saturday evening at the annual inspection in Hyde Park. The City corps has participated in the general impetus given to volunteering by the war, and on Saturday, though it has more than 100 members at the front, had close upon 1,000 officers and men in the ranks, an advance of more than 300 upon the inspection muster of last year. In the absence of Colonel Cholmondeley, commanding the mounted infantry of the City Imperial Volunteers, the command was taken by Colonel Matthey. Among the officers who marched past with the corps was Lord Bingham, late a Captain in the Rifle Brigade, who will ultimately succeed Colonel Cholmondeley as Lieut.-Colonel Commandant of the "L. R. B's."

Lord Wolseley was to have made the half-yearly inspection of the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, on Tuesday, but the ceremony was cancelled at the last moment. It has been directed that the 120 gentlemen cadets of the senior division, who are passing out in the usual way to receive their commissions, shall be increased by fifty-seven of the junior division, who in the ordinary course would have remained at the College until Christmas.

General Sir A. G. Montgomery Moore, K.C.B., resumed command of the Aldershot District on Tuesday, from sick leave.

Lieut.-General Sir George White, V.C., will not take over his duties as Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Gibraltar until July 20, as now arranged.

Lieut.-General M. H. Nicolson, C.B., Bombay Infantry, and Colonel E. A. Young, I.S.C., have permission to reside out of India.

A memorial is shortly to be erected to the late Lieut.-General Sir Penn Symons, who was killed at the battle of Dundee. The committee, of which Lord Kingsale is chairman, have commissioned Mr. Taylor, of Berners Street, to execute a window for the church of Botus Fleming, Cornwall, with the subject of "Christ and the Centurion," as appropriate to a soldier's memory.

Lieut.-General T. Kelly-Kenny, C.B., now in command of the 6th Division in South Africa, has been granted a Distinguished Service Reward of £100 a year.

Major-General F. T. Lloyd, C.B., R.A., will attain the age limit on the 28th prox., but will not be retired. It is proposed to continue him on the active list as a supernumerary to enable him to complete his period of five years as Governor of the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich.

Major-General the Hon. H. F. Eaton will be Commandant of the National Rifle Association camp at Bisley next month. General Eaton occupied the same position for several years, and was at Bisley ten years ago when he received orders to proceed to London and assume command of the 2nd Batn. Grenadier Guards.

Major-General J. F. Hilton has left England, accompanied by Mrs. Hilton, for Barbados, to take up command of the troops in that colony on appointment.

The people of Lewisham have decided to present Major-General Baden-Powell with a pair of gold spurs and a gold flask in token of their admiration of his gallant defence of Mafeking.

The death of Major-General J. G. Harkness, Colonel, retired pay, late Northumberland Fusiliers, leaves a Distinguished Service Reward vacant.

Major-General D. J. S. McLeod, C.B., Madras Cavalry, completes, on Tuesday next, his five years in command of a second-class district, Madras.

Major-General H. R. Abadie, C.B., who left England lately for the West Coast of Africa on special service, is stated in a telegram to have left Sierra Leone on Wednesday after inspecting the military forces.

Major-General F. T. Lloyd, C.B., Governor of the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, is the Worshipful Master of the Royal Artillery Masonic Lodge for the ensuing year.

Brigadier-General H. D. A. Cutbill has a strong brigade of Militia under his command at Kilworth Camp, co. Cork. It is made up of the 3rd Batn. Border Regiment (Colonel Bain), 3rd Batn. Oxfordshire Light Infantry (Lieut.-Colonel Lord Orkney), 4th Batn. Shropshire Light Infantry (Colonel Lucas), and 3rd Batn. Wiltshire Regiment (Colonel Sandford). These units will remain throughout the summer. In addition, other details visit Kilworth for musketry and field training. General Cutbill is an officer of wide experience. He served for years in the Royal Irish Rifles, the 1st Batn. of which he commanded 1890-94, when he retired on retired pay. He is a Staff College graduate, served in the New Zealand War 1863-66, and was on the staff at Halifax, N.S., 1884-88. He has commanded the 4th Batn. Royal Irish Rifles from October, 1895.

Brigadier-General Sir Alfred Gaselee, with the Staff of the Indian contingent to China, will leave Calcutta on Monday next in the Zibenghla.

Brigadier-General E. G. Barrow, C.B., I.S.C., will act as chief of the staff to Sir Alfred Gaselee as at first stated, and not command a brigade as was said in a telegram on Monday.

Brigadier-General G. Henry, R.E., now D.A.G. Madras, will act as Quartermaster-General at Indian Army headquarters in the absence of Sir Alfred Gaselee in command of the Indian contingent in China.

Brigadier-General A. R. F. Dorward, C.B., Colonel on the staff for R.E., Wei-Hei-Wei, commanded the column which went to the relief of Admiral Seymour at Tien-tsin. The column, which was composed of Royal Welsh Fusiliers, Sikhs, American Marines, Japanese infantry, and German bluejackets, reached Admiral Seymour at a point near Lo-fa on Wednesday evening, and succeeded in driving off the enemy after heavy fighting.

Brigadier-General G. H. More-Molyneux, C.B., I.S.C., on return to India from leave, has resumed command of the Bundelkund District.

Brigadier-Generals Sir Norman Stewart, Bart., and O'M. Creagh, V.C., who command the two infantry brigades proceeding with the Indian expedition to China, command respectively at the present time the Hyderabad Contingent and garrison at Aden. Sir Norman Stewart succeeded his father, the lamented Field Marshal Sir Donald Stewart, in the baronetcy.

Colonel B. T. Mahon, D.S.O., 8th Hussars according to Mr. John Stuart, special correspondent of the Morning Post, is quite one of our most trustworthy cavalry leaders. Speaking of his conduct of the relief of Mafeking, Mr. Stuart says:—

"From the very beginning Col. Mahon had the affair completely in hand. I never saw a cooler commander. His instructions were quick and met the situation. He never needed to improve on them; and his fore-knowledge of the enemy's plan was almost like divination. Wherever the Boers tried to force a way to the convoy they found themselves badly blocked. It was a real delight to see such masterly handling of the men. I don't believe that Mahon could fumble if he tried. Thinking hard, eyes on the ground; issuing orders with an abrupt ring of finality; seeing everything, knowing where everyone was, what he had done and what he ought to be doing, the coolest and probably the happiest man on the field."

Colonel J. F. Bally, R.A., commandant of the School of Gunnery, Colonel R. M. Barklie, commanding R.E. on Salisbury Plain, and Lieut.-Colonel G. P. Bourcicault, A.S.C., have been appointed the board of officers which is to inquire into and report on a site on Salisbury Plain for an Artillery School of Instruction.

Colonel C. J. Long, who commanded the Royal Artillery at the battle of Colenso, and was so severely wounded that he was for some time in the greatest danger, has been placed upon half-pay in consequence of ill-health. The greatest sympathy is felt for the tried soldier.

Colonel F. F. Ditmas, Colonel on the Staff, Commanding R.A., Thames District, attains tomorrow the age limit of sixty-two.

Colonel G. Poignand completes to-morrow his term of five years as A.A.G. for Instruction Western District, and is succeeded by Colonel W. W. M. Smith, R.A.

Colonel G. D. Stawell, late Devonshire Regiment, A.A.G. Meerut District, is officiating as Director of Military Education in India, in the absence of Colonel H. D. Hutchinson on eight months' leave to England.

Colonel C. S. Gordon, 5th-68th Regimental District, is at Salisbury Plain in command of four battalions of the Tyne and Tees Volunteer Infantry Brigade, consisting of the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd V.B.'s Northumberland Fusiliers, and 5th V.B. Durham Light Infantry. The men, who are up for a fortnight's training, will be dismissed to their homes on Saturday next.

Colonel R. B. Mainwaring, C.M.G., late Royal Welsh Fusiliers, who has been employed for some time on the Lines of Communication, Cape Colony, comes home to take over command of the 23rd Regimental District, Wrexham.

Colonel W. S. Clarke, who has been acting as A.A.G. at Devonport since January last, has been appointed to the command of the Regimental District, Worcester, vice Colonel de Berniere, whose five years expire on the 9th prox.

Colonel F. A. Disney-Roebeck, half pay, late Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, will to-morrow complete his five years out of employment since he gave up his battalion command.

Colonel Sir Frederick Cardew, retired list, late South Lancashire Regiment, has been appointed Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Straits Settlements, vacant by the death recently of Colonel Sir Charles Mitchell. He joined the Army in 1858, and retired in March, 1889, after commanding the 2nd Batn. South Lancashire Regiment for over two years. He served in the Umbeyla Campaign, 1863 (mentioned in despatches, medal with clasp); in the Zulu War, 1879 (mentioned in despatches, medal with clasp, and brevet of Major); in the Transvaal Campaign, 1881, as A.A. and Q.M.G. Natal Field Force. He was Resident Commissioner in Zululand, 1890, and has been Governor of Sierra Leone at a very critical period.

Colonel C. H. B. Norcott, lately commanding the 1st Batn. Rifle Brigade in Natal, has been placed on half-pay.

WAR SUMMARY.

Saturday, June 23.

Lord Roberts has stated several times that he only awaited Sir Redvers Buller's occupation of Standerton to complete his arrangements for the conclusion of the campaign. This occupation, he had reason to think, would take place shortly. To-day Gen. Buller telegraphed that Lord Dundonald's Cavalry marched into Standerton yesterday morning. It has since transpired that the first men to reach the town were three Guides. They were followed by Col. Gough's Composite Regiment, forming part of Lord Dundonald's Brigade, and including Strathcona's Horse. The infantry bivouacked six miles out, having marched over 20 miles. The landroost and officials left the town during the morning (of the 22nd) for Machadodorp. The burghers had evacuated the town three days earlier. A patrol of Transvaal police, which was left behind on the look-out, also retired after commandeering all the farmers' horses in the neighbourhood. The troops were welcomed heartily when they rode into the town. The Boers destroyed the centre span of the railway bridge on the 21st. Otherwise the line is intact.

Admiral Harris, commanding the Cape Station, having intimated to Gen. Buller that the services of the naval contingent lent from the Fort were now necessary on their ship, Capt. Jones and his blue-jackets, together with the Natal Naval Volunteers, were placed under orders forthwith to leave the army and proceed to Durban. Sir Redvers Buller, in a special order to the army, said "the Naval Brigade will leave the command amidst the sincere regrets of all ranks and arms." He wished them a hearty good-bye, and assured them that they carried with them the gratitude and best wishes of their comrades of the Natal Field Force.

Gen. Ian Hamilton occupied Heidelberg, the enemy retreating on the advance of his column, and being pursued for six or seven miles by mounted force. De Villiers's commando, consisting of 200 men, with 280 horses, 18 waggons, 260 rifles, and over 100,000 rounds of ammunition, arrived at Blickfontein, and surrendered to Sir Charles Warren. It included 16 leading rebels, but De Villiers himself with a small party had gone eastwards.

Part of De Wet's commando, consisting of about 700 to 800 men, with three guns, attacked the railway between Kroonstad and Honing Spruit at dawn to-day. Meantime, at Honing Spruit Station, a train from Pretoria going south with 400 infantry was also attacked.

The released prisoners from Waterval hastily at the Boer arrived. They were armed with rifles surrendered at the Pretoria Boers and were without artillery. Col. Bullock, Devon Regiment, was in command. The attacking force numbered about 300 and had two 15prs. Col. Bullock just managed to telegraph to Kroonstad before the wires were cut. The enemy destroyed the railway on each side of our position. They sent a white flag summoning the troops to surrender, but the demand was at once refused. An attack with rifle fire from the north was immediately commenced. It was then about half-past eight. The Boers also opened with shell fire from guns posted to the north and south-east of the position. Then their riflemen, riding round to the east, practically encircled our men. After a heavy shell and rifle fire, which lasted several hours, the enemy again invited Col. Bullock to surrender, but he indignantly refused and continued his unflinching resistance until half-past three, when reinforcements despatched by Gen. Knox, consisting of the 17th Battery R.F.A., and 300 Yeomanry under Col. Brookfield, from Kroonstad, arrived. The Boers fled immediately. Major Hobbs, 2nd Batn. West Yorkshire Regiment, who had been eight months a prisoner, was killed; Lieut. Smith, Gloucestershire Regiment, was wounded, and three men were killed and 16 wounded. Fortunately, Dr. Lenthal Heath, consulting surgeon on Lord Roberts's staff, happened to be in the train; otherwise he wounded would have fared badly. Among the reinforcements from Kroonstad were also the 4th Batn. Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders and the 17th Lancers. All took part in the relief of the attacked force. The wounded were sent to Kroonstad, where they arrived safely. Two have died, but the remainder are doing well.

Sunday, June 24.

The western portion of the Transvaal stated to be now quite settled down. The result of Lord Roberts's interview with Gen. Baden-Powell has been that a system of garrisons at important central posts, such as Zeebust, Rustenburg, and Vryburg, are to be maintained with the view of frequent patrols being sent out. There is every indication, however, that the population will be only too ready to quietly turn to farming pursuits, the general impression among them being that they have everything to gain by being under British rule.

Tuesday, June 26.

An important despatch from Lord Roberts, issued by the War Office:—

"Pretoria, June 25, 4.45 p.m.
"Owing to breaks in telegraph line and railway I have been unable to obtain full particulars of two mishaps on the lines of communications, which I do not think have been fully reported to you. So far as I can ascertain, the facts are as follows:—On June 2, a convoy of 50 waggons in charge of Lieut. Corballis, Reserve of Officers, was despatched from Rhenoster to Heilbron, escorted by 160 details of the Highland Brigade under Capt. Johnstone, Volunteer Company, Seaforth Highlanders; Lieut. Lang, Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders; and Lieut. Murray, Highland Light Infantry. At 1 a.m. on June 4, Major Haig, in command of 1,000 details at Vredefort Road, received a message from officer commanding convoy, dated 9.30 p.m. 3rd, that they were surrounded by superior numbers and required assistance. Major Haig at once started with 600 details and sent the message on to Major Haking, commandant at Railhead, some seven miles further north, at Kromellansburg Spruit. The latter received the message at 6 a.m. and in an hour later despatched 120 mounted infantry Berkshire Regiment to join Major Haig. Both parties returned in the afternoon without having been able to get touch with the convoy, the mounted infantry being driven in by superior numbers. The convoy was surrounded on the morning of June 4, and in reply to a flag of truce from Christian De Wet surrendered. On the morning of June 7 the enemy attacked the post on our line of communications just north of the recently repaired railway bridge at Rhenoster River, held by the 3rd (4th) Derbyshire Regiment and a party of Imperial Yeomanry scouts. The pickets which had been posted on a range of kopjes just north of the camp were attacked at dawn and driven in, and the enemy occupied the range, which completely commanded the camp. Our troops lost 35 killed and 111 wounded—the remainder being taken prisoners. Capt. Anderson, Imperial Yeomanry, has since escaped and reports Capt. W. Knight, D.A.A.G., and Lieut. Kreager, Imperial Yeomanry, are prisoners and are well."

Wednesday, June 27.

There was a dearth of news to-day. Gen. Botha, with the foreign legion, about 1,200 strong, was reported to be in the vicinity of Pienars River. The Boers were stated to be entrenching in considerable force in the hills beyond Middelburg.

Gen. Brabant's Division to-day attacked a Boer commando a few miles west of Senekal, and succeeded in completely routing it. Our casualties were not heavy.

Gen. Hunter, in temporary command of Gen. Ian Hamilton's Division, made one march to-day from Heidelberg towards Frankfort without meeting any opposition.

Sir Frederick Carrington arrived at Bulawayo.

Friday, June 29.

The situation at the hour of going to press is that Lord Roberts has telegraphed from Pretoria accounts of some minor skirmishes at Senekal and Rooval Spruit, in which the enemy were beaten off. He records no movement of importance.

Telegraphic communication is now open from Durban to Johannesburg, and the situation in the Transvaal around Pretoria is stated to be quieter.

The Boers are now sending their supplies to Barberton, which looks as if the idea of resistance in the Lydenburg district had been given up. At Lourenco Marques it is believed that their surrender is imminent.

Lord Roberts has found it necessary to dismiss the Netherlands Railway officials. He ordered them to leave the country within 70 hours.

Major-Gen. Baden-Powell reports that one of his patrols captured an influential Boer, named Ray, who had been endeavouring to raise a commando in the Rustenburg district, and that another patrol brought in over 100 rifles, making over 4,000 rifles and 1,000 inferior pieces taken during the last few days.

Evidence is accumulating that the end of the war is approaching. The Burghers still continue to surrender in considerable numbers, and all who do so declare there is a strong feeling in favour of terminating the struggle, as all confidence in the two ex-Presidents is gone, owing to their gross misrepresentation of facts from the beginning. The Eastern districts of Marico, Rustenburg, Lichtenburg, Wolmaranstad, and Bloemhof have now only 400 men at the front. Sir Charles Warren reports from Cape Colony that the rebellion in the North is at an end.

It is officially denied that 50,000 British troops are immediately to be despatched to China. All the troops are to remain in South Africa until the conclusion of the war. Reuter's correspondent says that the Guards Brigade will probably be the first to return home from South Africa.

The foreign military attachés with Lord Roberts have been recalled, with one exception. They left Pretoria on Monday, and will sail from Cape Town next week. At a farewell dinner given in their honour, they spoke in high terms of the "splendid fighting qualities and kind generosity of the British soldier; not a case of inhumanity or bad treatment of an enemy having come under their notice."

Total casualties since the beginning of the war up to the end of last week:—

	Officers.	N.C.O. & Men
Killed ...	250	2,384
Died of wounds ...	68	589
Missing and prisoners (excluding those who have been recovered)	37	1,650
Died of disease ...	125	3,985
Accidental deaths ...	—	66
Sent home as invalids...	784	16,358
	1,264	25,032

Total Losses (exclusive of sick and wounded men now in British Hospitals in South Africa) ... 26,296

SMOKE SHELL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In your issue of the 2nd inst., you have a paragraph on page 531 in which you say that "the French military authorities have not been slow in giving practical effect to the teaching of the war"—inasmuch as they have "produced a smoke shell for the new field gun, which is intended to burst in front of the enemy's line and to disguise movements on the friendly side." Permit me to say that on the day that Lord Roberts left on board the Dunottar Castle for the Cape in December last, he received a letter from the present writer suggesting the use of "common shell filled with black powder, or some better smoke-producing material, which no doubt our chemists could easily compound, in order to form a smoke screen for our assaulting troops, i.e., after the enemy's entrenchments had been well prepared with lyddite and shrapnel, and just before the assault."

DAVID J. LAMB,

late Major Volunteer Artillery.

Beechwood, Dunkeld, N.B., June 12.

THE Army League and Imperial Defence Association will hold its first general meeting at 4 p.m. on Tuesday next, at the Royal United Service Institution. Lord Blythswood will be in the chair. Resolutions embodying the principles and policy of the League will be put to the meeting.

A VOLUNTEER BANQUET.—Lord Wolseley presided over a most enthusiastic Volunteer commemoration banquet at the Hotel Cecil, on Thursday evening, to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of the first Volunteer review by the Queen in Hyde Park on June 23, 1860. Lord Wolseley, in making the toast of the evening, said that at the present time the number of men bearing arms for her Majesty was half a million, and with the Militia, Volunteers, and Yeomanry it was three-quarters of a million. The sending of Volunteers abroad was a very important step, and he hoped it would be followed in all future wars, either great or small. Such was the military spirit of the country that whatever the Queen asked she would find willing and good soldiers to carry out her orders. Lord Wolseley announced that he had sent a telegram of congratulation to her Majesty, who, in the course of her reply, said "that this anniversary of the first Volunteer review is specially memorable from the fact that this is the first occasion since the formation of the force that the Volunteers had been employed on active service in the field, where they have so greatly distinguished themselves." Her Majesty's gracious words were cheered to the echo.

A BOON TO OFFICERS AND MEN UPON THE BATTLEFIELD AND IN HOSPITALS.—The official Military Hospital reports, forwarded during the last Wars in Germany, Austria and France, prove that the pleasant, slightly stimulating, strengthening qualities of the World-known and celebrated HOFF'S MALT EXTRACT, exercise a very beneficial influence upon the health and recovery of the wounded soldiers. Do, therefore, not fail to send your gallant warriors in SOUTH AFRICA a quantity of this MALT, which is so popular in the highest circles of England, and has been used by Members of the ROYAL FAMILY, and is manufactured by M. HOFF, of HAMBURG. Beware of imitation, and see that the label carries the name of M. HOFF. Refuse any other but this one sold by LEOPOLD HOFF, 25, NEW BRIDGE STREET, E.C.

WITH THE ARTILLERY IN NATAL.

By CAPTAIN C. HOLMES WILSON, R.A.

CAVALRY IN THE FIELD.

Our cavalry in Natal has often been condemned for not attempting impossibilities. When however, an army faces a river across which there is not a ford, and the opposite bank of which is held in strength by the enemy, it can seldom get an opportunity. The difficulties of the Natal campaign have not been appreciated, and probably never will be to their full extent. There are few other countries in the world in which the Boers could have stood as they have stood here, and I venture to say that there is no other army in existence which would have attacked them time after time as our men have done without being disheartened. Their bravery has been beyond dispute. When at home we hear a lot of the South African veldt, and some have come to believe that cavalry can charge at any time. In Natal I have only seen one place in which a charge was possible, and that was at Elandslaagte. There the ground was open, and there our men did get at the Boers, with what result we know.

Cavalry even in scouting can scarcely be expected to climb hills on top of which there is a kopje which may be held by hundreds of Boers. If they do ascend they are certain to be shot. If a patrol is sent round a hill, it is just as likely to meet a similar fate, with the additional prospect of being cut off. Consequently, say the critics, the cavalry must be condemned. But why should men ride up a mountain on the slopes of which they are conspicuous, and from whose summit they will be visible for miles? The hunter does not frighten his quarry by placing himself in the most exposed positions he can find. He moves with stealth, and makes use of all the cover he can secure. Why then, I ask, should not our cavalry do the same? Let us at least be reasonable in our criticism.

The great lesson to be learnt from the present war is the power of the rifle, whether it be handled by mounted or dismounted men. We have consequently to ask ourselves whether the time has not arrived in which cavalry as a mobile arm depending for success on shock tactics must cease to exist. At present they occupy an anomalous position. They cannot fight in the firing line, and if a mobile column is required for rapid work it has to be stiffened by the use of mounted infantry. The war has shown us the necessity for a large force of well-equipped mounted troops, and in view of the great development of firearms the problem we have to confront is whether there is work for both cavalry and mounted infantry to do, or whether a force developed by combining both would not be better suited to our possible requirements in future wars. Every man in the field, except those of the artillery, should, I am disposed to think, have a rifle; and even in the artillery the gunners' carbines might be profitably replaced by rifles. If our troopers carried rifles instead of carbines, and were to act as infantry in addition to being taught to ride, would their mobility be interfered with, or would they be unable to charge if they got a chance? It seems incredible to suggest that such should be the case. On the other hand, suppose that the present system is continued, what will the result be? Will companies of infantry get a smattering of mounted drill, and then be sent back to their regiments to be called upon when required, or will a new and mobile force be raised, in which the men will carry rifles and be taught to rely on them for success?

If such a force were raised we should then have two mounted arms in the field, both trying to play almost the same part. The mounted man with the rifle will be as mobile as the trooper without it. The man with the rifle will be more useful in the firing line and just as efficient as a scout—the only thing he will not be taught to do is to charge! Cavalry if armed with rifles need not of necessity cease to be called cavalry. Their mobility need not be destroyed, but their power can be increased. We have already seen the advantages possessed by an army that has a large proportion of mounted men attached to it in the field. The question is what constitutes the power of this force, what is the factor that gives a flanking movement its moral effect? Is it due to shock tactics? It can scarcely be so here.

Rather is it due, or should be due, to the fact that the force that has threatened the movement is capable of accomplishing it; is self-containing in fact, is relying on the effect of rifle fire to complete what mobility has commenced. Mobility places a force in a favourable strategical situation; fire effect must then complete the task. The day seems to have passed in which the mere fact of the presence of partially armed mounted troops can lead to success. Under these conditions could not cavalry be given better arms and taught to do more dismounted drill? They would then take up the position that mounted infantry will gradually steal from them if they are drilled in future as they are drilled now.

HOSPITALS IN SOUTH AFRICA.

The War Office has issued the correspondence between the Secretary of State for War and Lord Roberts concerning the allegations made against the hospital arrangements for the Field Force in South Africa:—

"FROM THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR TO THE GENERAL OFFICER COMMANDING, CAPE.
"War Office, June 4, 1900, 12.30 p.m.

"Following has been received by Lord Wolsley: 'Cape Town, June 1.—Returned from front. Terrible pressure sickness. Breakdown in medical arrangements. Doctors, nurses, equipment miserably insufficient. Pitiable scenes here entirely falsify statements sent home.' The above is signed 'Coutts.' Please let me know at once if there is any grounds for these alarming statements. Consult principal medical officer with Lord Roberts's force if necessary and principal medical officer, Bloemfontein."

"FROM THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR TO FIELD-MARSHAL LORD ROBERTS.
"War Office, June 5, 1900.

"We are receiving private telegrams complaining of alleged general breakdown in hospitals. I have asked General Officer Commanding Lines of Communication for a report. A complaint of your hospitals at the front has just come in. Is there any foundation for it? You will of course spare no expense to mitigate suffering."

"FROM LORD ROBERTS TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR. (Received June 6.)
"Pretoria, June 6, 1900, 6.30 p.m.

"I was aware Burdett-Coutts had drawn attention to the medical arrangements at Kroonstad. On our arrival there a very large number of sick and wounded had to be provided for, and the accommodation available proved quite insufficient for them. The very existence of my force depended on supplies coming up by train along a line of railway nearly 900 miles long, every bridge of which for the last 128 miles had been destroyed by the enemy. Notwithstanding this, I ordered that the requirements of the sick were to be first taken in hand as soon as the rail had been repaired and a few trains of supplies had been got through. The principal medical officer proceeded with the first train to Kroonstad with surgeons and nurses; the field hospital could not be utilised as we were about to move on again, but No. 3 General and Scotch Hospital had been held in readiness at Bloemfontein to be sent to Kroonstad directly the line was open; this was done, and the former received 180 patients within 24 hours of its arrival. I repeatedly visited the hospital during the short time I was at Kroonstad, and I impressed upon the principal medical officer and Lord Methuen, who was on his way to Kroonstad, to do all that was possible to remedy matters. A few days after my departure I received a report from the principal medical officer that medical arrangements there were in all respects in good order; while Lord Methuen has since informed me that everything is thoroughly satisfactory. I was deeply distressed at being unable to make suitable arrangements for the sick on our first arrival at Kroonstad, but it is obvious that a certain amount of suffering is inseparable from the rapid advance of a large Army in an enemy's country, when railway communication has been destroyed, and such suffering would have been enormously increased had it not been for the prompt manner in which the medical authorities made the best of the very scanty accommodation available at a place little larger than an ordinary English village.

"Since leaving Kroonstad we have had no difficulty about our sick and wounded; there have been comparatively few sick and we have found ample accommodation for them, and the wounded both here and at Johannesburg. Sir William MacCormac and Mr. Treves have stated publicly their experience of the medical arrangements in South Africa, and I submit that their evidence is more reliable than that of Burdett-Coutts, to whom I would have explained what our difficulties were at Kroonstad if he had taken the trouble to call upon me."

"FROM SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR TO LORD ROBERTS.
"War Office, June 20.

"We continue to receive disquieting reports as to state of hospitals. It is alleged that there has been deficiency of medical appliances and comforts, and even necessities; that there has been much overcrowding; that nurses and hospital orderlies are too few; and that the proportion of deaths has consequently been abnormal. We are told that reports made by MacCormac and Treves were optimistic, and that conditions have probably changed for the worse since their visit. You explain the circumstances owing to which the state of hospitals at Kroonstad was unsatisfactory. Can it be said that, except where these special difficulties presented themselves, the arrangements were, on the whole, sufficient; that the number of cases to be dealt with was greater than could reasonably have been anticipated; also that the state of things was confined to one or two places, and that it has now ceased to exist? Is it true that in cases requiring careful nursing and treatment proportion of deaths has been unusually high? Can we do anything now to mitigate the evil if it exists? Shall we send you more nurses?"

"FROM FIELD-MARSHAL LORD ROBERTS TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR.
"Pretoria, June 25, 10.10 p.m.

"As regards hospitals at the base before leaving Cape Town I personally assured myself that all arrangements were working satisfactorily, and I have not heard since any complaints about them. When we first arrived at Bloemfontein we had an abnormal number of sick, due, no doubt, not only to the peculiarly exhausting nature of the march, but also to the terrible insanitary conditions of our camp at Paardeberg, where the only water available for drinking purposes flowed down from the Boer camp 1½ miles higher up the river, which was crowded with dead animals in a state of decomposition. We also had a considerable number of wounded after the fight on March 10. To hastily improvise accommodation at Bloemfontein for such a large number, which gradually increased up to 2000 before I left that town, was no easy task. Owing to the rapidity of our march from the Modder no tents could be carried with the force, and none were available until our railway communication with Cape Colony had been restored. As soon as I could arrange for such supplies being placed at Bloemfontein as were necessary for the very existence of the force, I ordered up tents and all necessary appliances for the sick, nurses, more doctors, and more hospitals. Bloemfontein is not a large town, but all suitable public buildings, schools, &c., were made into hospitals. I constantly visited these, and after a very short time they were, in my opinion, in good order and not overcrowded. To give some idea of the pressure at Bloemfontein, I would state that from the date of our arrival there on March 13 until two or three days ago, or in a little more than three months, there have been approximately 6,369 admissions from enteric fever alone. Of these 1,370 died giving a mortality of 21 per cent. Numerous cases which were returned as simple continued fever have, no doubt, been cases of slight enteric. This would much reduce the percentage of mortality. I am not aware whether 21 per cent. of enteric cases is an abnormal rate of mortality in civil hospitals in peace time, in tropical climates, if so it must be ascribed to the abnormal conditions which obtained at Bloemfontein owing to the exhausted state of the men when admitted to hospital, and not, in my opinion, to neglect on the part of the Royal Army Medical Corps. The next place we had to form a hospital at was at Kroonstad, 128 miles distant, and the difficulties which attended the disposal of the sick there I have already fully explained in my telegram. After Kroonstad we established no permanent hospital until we reached Johannesburg, 137 miles further on. There we had considerably less difficulties to contend with as compared with Kroonstad, owing to the large civil hospital in existence there, in which a number of our sick and wounded were accommodated, and to the fact that several suitable buildings were available. I visited Johannesburg two days ago, and found the medical arrangements in fair order. At Pretoria, though a much smaller place than Johannesburg, we have managed to make the sick comfortable in the various local hospitals, and by utilising certain public buildings. Had our line of rail not been so frequently interrupted we should have had here a number of tents, with spare doctors and nurses, who left Bloemfontein some days ago, but had been delayed by the rail being cut. I can quite understand that people who have no practical experience in such matters are much concerned to hear of the hardships sick and wounded soldiers have to undergo in time of war, especially when they are not aware of the many difficulties which have to be contended with in order to alleviate suffering on active service. Such difficulties are sufficiently great in countries in which there are large towns and villages, and easy communication by road and rail from the base of operations, but they have been immeasurably increased in South Africa by the local conditions to which I have already referred. I have no wish to shirk responsibility in the matter, or to screen any shortcomings which might be proved against the Royal Army Medical Corps. You state you have been told that reports of MacCormac and Treves are optimistic, and that conditions have probably changed for the worse since their visit. It is true that neither of these gentlemen took part in a long or difficult march, but two consulting surgeons who are now en route to England (Mr. Watson Cheyne and Mr. Lenthal Cheate) have been with this force from the Modder River to Pretoria. I would ask that their opinions on the subject might be ascertained, and I would further suggest that a small committee consisting of one or two medical men of recognised ability in whom the public have full confidence, together with some men of sound common sense, should be deputed to proceed to South Africa in order to inquire into and furnish a full report on the working of the medical arrangements throughout the war. I will guarantee that they shall have the fullest assistance to enable them to make a searching inquiry into the matter. If their visit should result in ameliorating the conditions of our sick and wounded soldiers during time of war no one would be more grateful and pleased than myself."

Obituary.

NAVY.

Admiral F. A. Maxse died in London on Monday night from a severe attack of enteric fever. The deceased officer, who returned to England from South Africa a few weeks since in a serious state of health, was the son of Mr. James and Lady Caroline Maxse, and grandson of the fifth Earl of Berkeley, and was born in 1833. In 1852 he entered the Royal Navy, and served as acting Flag-Lieut. to Admiral Sir E. Lyons during the admiral's inspection of the Circassian coast, and was bearer of a flag of truce previous to the attack on Redout Kaleh. He was present at the bombardment of Odessa, and assisted at the disembarkation of troops in the Crimea, where he was naval A.D.C. to Lord Raglan, and was promoted for his services. After a further ten years' service in the Navy he retired, and subsequently became an Admiral in 1885. After his retirement, he threw himself into public service life, and gained the reputation of being a clever, hot-headed man, ever ready to take up the pen in argument, and he wrote in an unusual style. He contested Southampton and the Tower Hamlets division as a Liberal Unionist without success. In his early political days he had been an active supporter of trade unionism and the Reform League, but ultimately became an Imperialist, and a supporter of the present policy in South Africa. He leaves two sons, Major Maxse, of the Coldstream Guards, now at the seat of war, and Mr. Leo J. Maxse, the editor of the National Review, and one daughter, who is married to Lord Edward Cecil.

ARMY.

Gen. Thomas Gillilan, retired list Indian Staff Corps, died at 21, Porchester Square, W., on the 27th inst., aged 81. He joined the Army Dec. 12, 1840; became Captain Sept. 1, 1850; Major Feb. 18, 1861; Lieut.-Colonel Dec. 12, 1862; Colonel Dec. 12, 1871; Major-General April 1, 1882; Lieut.-General Jan. 22, 1887; and General March 31, 1892. He served with the 35th Madras Native Infantry in the operations leading up to the capture of Rangoon in April, 1852, and was Paymaster of the Madras Division of the Army until the end of the war (medal with clasp for Pegu).

Major-Gen. Sir Stanhope William Jephson, Bart., C.B., Colonel, retired list, late 2nd Queen's, has just died at the age of 90. He joined the Army Nov. 26, 1830; became Lieut. Feb. 19, 1836; Captain Dec. 28, 1841; Major Aug. 4, 1848; Lieut.-Colonel July 1, 1853; Colonel Nov. 28, 1854; and retired with the hon. rank of Major-General May 24, 1861. He served with the Queen's in the campaign in Afghanistan and Beloochistan, including the storm and capture of Ghuznee (medal) and of Khelat. He served also in the campaign in the Southern Mahratta country in 1844, including the storm of the fortress of Punella, when he commanded the storming party (wounded). Commanded the Queen's in the campaign in North China in 1860 (medal and C.B.). He married in 1849 Sophia, daughter of Mr. E. Hawes, of Woodford, and succeeded his half-brother in 1884. Sir Stanhope Jephson leaves no heir.

Major-Gen. J. G. Harkness, Colonel, retired list, Northumberland Fusiliers, died at his residence, Foy House, Ore, Sussex, on the 22nd inst., aged 70 years. He joined the Army as Ensign in the 55th Regiment, May 13, 1853, and served throughout the Crimean Campaign 1854-55. He carried the Queen's colour at the Alma, was present at Inkerman, through the siege and at the fall of Sevastopol, and was engaged in the assault of the Redan, the capture of the Quarries, and the sortie of Oct. 26, 1854 (medal with three clasps, 5th class of the Medjidie, and Turkish medal). After the Crimean War he was appointed to the 5th (Northumberland) Fusiliers, and became A.D.C. to the Governor of Mauritius, 1862. He served in South Africa in 1864-67, and in the Afghan Campaign 1878-80, where he commanded the column that cleared the entrance to the Khyber Pass. He was with the expedition that crossed the Kabul river in Besud, and in the action with the Safis; he was afterwards with the expedition to Kunar Valley, and the destruction of Fort Abdul Khel. He commanded the 1st Batn. 5th Fusiliers at the surprise and destruction of Fort Benares Khan, and the expedition into Kama and destruction of the forts (wounded, mentioned in despatches, medal with clasp). He became Captain Jan. 18, 1856; Major March 30, 1872; Lieut.-Colonel July 1, 1878; Colonel July 1, 1882; and retired with the hon. rank of Major-General Jan. 29, 1886.

Major Herbert Thomas de Cartaret Hobbs, 2nd Batn. West Yorkshire Regiment, was killed in action at Honing Spruit on the 22nd inst. Born April 28, 1857, he joined the 62nd Regiment as Sub-Lieut. Feb. 11, 1875; became Captain Jan. 17, 1882; was Adjutant 1890-93; was promoted Major in the West Yorkshire Regiment by selection Feb. 20, 1895; and second in command 2nd Batn. May 18, 1899. He had only recently been released as a prisoner of war.

Capt. Sir James Dixon MacKenzie, ninth Baronet of Tarbat and seventh of Scatwell, died at his London residence, 15, Redcliffe Square, S.W., on the 22nd inst. Sir James MacKenzie, who was the third son of the late Major Lewis MacKenzie, of the Scots Greys, a grandson of the third baronet, was born in 1830, and was educated at Rugby. He served in the 79th and 14th Regiments, and retired in 1876, succeeding his cousin, Sir James John Randall MacKenzie, in 1884. Sir James married in 1858 Julia Stanley, daughter of Dr. Samuel Clutsum, who died in 1898. He is succeeded by his only son, James Kenneth Douglas, who was born in 1859, and married in 1888 Stephanie Corinne, youngest daughter of Dr. Jules Espinet, of Trinidad.

Capt. William Musgrave, Quartermaster, retired list, Army Service Corps, died at Sydenham on the 27th inst., aged 55. After serving in the ranks eleven years, he received his commission as Sub-Assistant Commissary Dec. 11, 1878; became Quartermaster and Hon. Captain Dec. 11, 1888; and retired a few weeks ago. He served in the Bechuanaland Expedition 1884-85.

Capt. Frank Hunnard, D.S.O., Army Service Corps, died at Newcastle, Natal, on the 13th inst., of enteric fever. Born Jan. 25, 1873, younger son of Mr. J. F. Hunnard, Westbourne Mansions, W., he joined the Army as 2nd Lieut. in the South Wales Borderers Dec. 17, 1892; became Lieut. in the Army Service Corps Sept. 29, 1895; and Captain Sept. 20, 1899. He received the D.S.O. in December, 1898, for service in the Sudan in the operations of that year (medal and Khedive's medal).

Lieut. Mounteney Kortright, 3rd Hussars, died of wounds at Pretoria on the 21st inst. Born June 16, 1872, he joined the 3rd Hussars from the Militia Jan. 25, 1893, and obtained his Lieutenantcy Feb. 21, 1894.

Lieut. Alexander John Grant Meek, 6th Inniskilling Dragoons, who was reported as missing after the earlier fighting near Pretoria, is now stated to have died there of wounds on the 7th inst. Born May 11, 1880, he joined the 5th (Militia) Batn. Royal Fusiliers May 11, 1897, and was appointed to the Inniskilling Dragoons Jan. 4, 1899, becoming Lieut. Oct. 24, 1899.

Lieut. Richard Leigh Clare Hobson, 4th Batn. King's Royal Rifles, was killed in action at Schippen's Farm, South Africa, on the 5th inst. Born April 28, 1876, he joined the Army as 2nd Lieut. King's Royal Rifles, May 4, 1898, and became Lieut. Oct. 22, 1899.

Lieut. Bertram Barré Waddell-Dudley, 2nd Batn. North Staffordshire Regiment, died at Wynberg on the 20th inst. of enteric fever. Born June 22, 1874, he joined the North Staffordshire Regiment as Lieut. from the Militia June 6, 1896, and became Lieut. Jan. 2, 1899.

2nd Lieut. John Starkie Preston, 1st Batn. Royal Scots, died at Dewetsdorp, on the 27th inst., of enteric fever. Born June 11, 1879, he joined the Royal Scots as 2nd Lieut. from the 3rd Batn. East Lancashire Regiment on Oct. 18 last.

2nd Lieut. Walter Garnet Rait, 1st Batn. King's Own Scottish Borderers, died at Wynberg Hospital on the 22nd inst. of enteric fever. Born Nov. 16, 1878, the only son of Lieut.-Col. Rait, C.B., of Anneten, Arbroath, N.B., he joined the Army, August 3rd, 1898.

2nd Lieut. Rupert Henry Hall, 4th Batn. Derbyshire Regiment, died at Kroonstad on the 15th inst. of wounds received at Rooodeval on the 7th inst. He was the eldest son of Col. Hall, Commandant Royal Hibernian Military School, and joined the Derbyshire Regiment Nov. 21, 1899.

THE OCCUPATION OF STANDERTON.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—A statement appeared in many of the leading newspapers this morning that the flag hoisted at Standerton, on its occupation by Gen. Buller, was the identical Union Jack which was flying over the town during its defence by the 57th and 94th Regiments, under my command in 1881-2 until the retrocession of the country. The "identical flag" was hauled down by myself at Fort Alice, where it had been flying for eighty-eight days' fighting, and has been ever since in my possession; it hangs now on the wall of my own dining room as a cherished trophy.

THE TREATMENT OF PRISONERS OF WAR.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—If you have space, would you kindly insert the following. In a recent Gazette I see that numerous promotions have taken place vice prisoners of war, viz., officers junior to those who are prisoners here promoted over their heads. How will this affect regimental officers who are here? It certainly seems hard that subalterns, who are here through no fault of their own, should have to suffer.

The Army.

CAVALRY.

Household Cavalry.—The three regiments are preparing a draft of 60 men to reinforce the composite regiment in South Africa. It is to be in readiness to embark on the 6th prox.

2nd Life Guards.—The death of Capt. Lord Kensington will give no promotion in the regiment, as he was seconded.

Royal Horse Guards (Blue).—Surg.-Lieut.-Col. Forrester died, it seems, on the voyage from Durban to Cape Town of enteric fever. He was buried in the Military Cemetery at Woodstock on the 21st inst. with military honours. He had been in charge of the Princess Christian Hospital Train, which did such splendid work in connection with Sir Redvers Buller's operations.

2nd Dragoons (Royal Scots Greys).—Major Hippius was to have left England on Saturday last in command of drafts in the Pinemore en route to rejoin headquarters, as second in command, but, at the last moment, a relapse of fever prostrated him, and his medical advisers would not allow him to embark. 2nd Lieut. Otway sailed from Cape Town for England, in the Assaye on the 18th inst., invalided.

6th (Inniskilling) Dragoons.—Lieut. Gibson left Tilbury on Saturday last in charge of drafts for South Africa in the Pinemore.

10th Hussars.—Lieut. the Hon. W. Cadogan, invalided from South Africa, arrived home on Tuesday. He is making as good progress as can be expected after his recent serious attack of enteric.

12th Lancers.—Major-Gen. Sir William Gatacre addressed at Colchester on Monday a draft of men leaving for the front. The general told them that they would find plenty of work, and would have to bring every faculty into play. Rough soldiering awaited them, but he wished them good luck. The men gave three cheers for the general. A large meeting at Kiriemuir of the Airlie Infantry, to consider in what form to commemorate the late Earl of Airlie, has resolved to erect columns of masonry on the heights above Cortachy Castle, in a position where the columns could always be seen from the whole valley of Strathmore. This proposal was adopted subject to any wish the Countess of Airlie might express.

14th Hussars.—Capt. Brooksbank sailed from Cape Town on the 18th inst. for England in the Assaye, invalided.

15th Hussars.—Lieut. the Hon. H. Edwardes, serving as A.D.C. to Lieut.-Gen. Sir Leslie Rundle in South Africa, has succeeded to the peerage by the death of his brother, Capt. Lord Kensington, 2nd Life Guards, at Bloemfontein, of wounds received in action.

16th Lancers.—Lieut.-Col. Frewen, who has been invalided from the Cape after his recent severe attack of enteric fever, will arrive in England in the Batavian early next week. When he left Cape Town he was regaining strength, and it was hoped that the sea voyage would help recovery. Lieut. MacCulloch left Cape Town for England in the American on the 18th inst., invalided.

17th Lancers.—A memorial service was held in Buckingham parish church on the 21st inst. for Lieut. the Hon. Charles Cavendish, son of Lord Chesham, who was killed in action near Pretoria. The building was crowded. The vicar, the Rev Phillip Goldingham, officiated. The sympathy for Lord and Lady Chesham is very great in the loss of their son and heir.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

The practice camp at Okehampton opened yesterday by the arrival of the 92nd Battery R.F.A. from Aldershot. This battery is to act as a depot throughout the practices. The 1st Brigade Division, consisting of N and S Batteries, R.H.A., will arrive on July 9.

The new 143rd, 144th, and 145th Batteries R.F.A. were taken on to the establishment of the regiment from Monday last. The 143rd is being formed at Fethard, and the 144th and 145th at Clogheen and Waterford respectively.

Major White, R.F.A., Capt. Galwey and Lieut. Norman, R.G.A., and Lieut. Wainwright, R.H.A., sailed from Cape Town on the 18th inst. for England in the Assaye, invalided.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The 4th Field Park is being formed at Aldershot, having been taken on to the establishment from June 1.

Col. St. G. C. Gore completes on Monday four years in the rank of Lieut.-Colonel, and will be made supernumerary.

A detachment of seven officers and 206 non-commissioned officers and men of the Royal Monmouthshire Engineers, left Aldershot on Tuesday for Salisbury Plain, where they are employed in connection with the erection of wooden huts at that station.

INFANTRY.

Grenadier Guards.—A memorial service was held on Saturday last, at the Guards' Chapel, Wellington Barracks, for Capt. E. Verschoyle, Lieut. A. Murray, and the non-commissioned officers and men of the 2nd Batn. who have fallen in South Africa. The officiating clergyman was the Rev. C. H. Murphy, Chaplain to the Forces, and the service was an adapted form of the ordinary service for the burial of the dead. The instrumental music was played by the band of the regiment, and the choir was composed of the drummers of the 1st Batn. from Windsor. As the congregation were assembling the band played the "Dead March" in Saul. The hymns were "Fight the Good Fight," "Peace, perfect Peace," and "Sleep on, Beloved," and the 39th Psalm was chanted. The relatives of the deceased officers present included Mrs. Verschoyle, Mr. Verschoyle (brother), and the Misses Verschoyle (sisters), Mr. C. J. Murray, M.P., and Lady Anne Murray (parents of Lieut. Murray), and Miss and Master Murray. Amongst others present were the Duke and Duchess of Somerset, the Earl of Aylesford, Major-Gen. and the Hon. Mrs. Trotter, and Capt. Trotter, Mrs. and Miss Ricardo, Col. Kinloch, Col. Vesey Dawson, the Hon. Mrs. Glyn, the Hon. Mrs. Henry Edwardes and the Hon. Sylvia G. Edwardes, Gen. Sir George and Lady Higginson, the Hon. Mrs. Wingfield, Capt. Earle, Capt. Darby-Griffith, and Mrs. Ward Cooke. Capt. Hobart, D.S.O., sailed from Cape Town for England in the Armenian on the 18th inst., invalided. Capt. F. E. Hervey-Bathurst, 3rd Batn., and Capt. Bonham and Lieut. Seymour, 2nd Batn., sailed from Cape Town for England in the Assaye on the 18th inst., invalided.

Coldstream Guards.—Major Monck, 2nd Batn., who was invalided home from the Cape, has been posted to the 3rd Batn. for duty.

Irish Guards.—Steps are being taken to obtain recruits for the regiment from the Irish Militia battalions now embodied.

Royal Scots (1st).—Details left Belfast yesterday for Strensall to be attached to the 3rd Batn. Northumberland Fusiliers.

Queen's (2nd).—The details proceeded on Saturday last from Gosport to Aldershot, and are attached to the 3rd Batn. Worcestershire Regiment. All recruits of the 3rd (Militia) Batn. who volunteer are to be in readiness to embark for the Cape early next month to join headquarters in the field.

Bufs (3rd).—Capt. Tarte, 1st Batn., is officiating as a D.A.A.G. for Musketry, Punjab.

King's Own Regiment (4th).—Capt. McLachlan, Adjutant, 1st V.B. Royal Fusiliers, has been appointed Assistant Staff Officer for Recruiting duties, Home District, which he will double with those of his present post.

Royal Fusiliers (7th).—The Quartermastership of the 1st Batn. in India is vacant by the death from heat apoplexy of Lieut. and Qrmr. Bell, at the Station Hospital, Colaba. The funeral took place with military honours, at Sewree Cemetery, when many officers of the Bombay garrison attended. The 1st Batn. Norfolk Regiment sent its band and a firing party. "The deceased," says a correspondent, "was highly respected by all ranks."

Lincolnshire Regiment (10th).—Capt. Forrest, 1st Batn., left England on Tuesday for South Africa with drafts in the Canada.

Devonshire Regiment (11th).—Major Ellicombe, 2nd Batn., from the depot, left England on Thursday for South Africa, in command of drafts in the Oratava.

Somersetshire Light Infantry (13th).—Brevet-Lieut.-Col. Couchman, D.S.O., 1st Batn., is officiating A.A.G., Meerut, vice Col. Stawell, doing duty as Director of Military Education in India.

West Yorkshire Regiment (14th).—Major Hobbs, 2nd Batn., who was killed in action on Saturday last, was taken prisoner owing to his staying behind to assist a wounded man at Willow Grange, in Natal, on Nov. 23. After eight weary months at Pretoria, he was released to fall at the hands of the enemy on his way down country. The loss of this brave soldier will be deplored by all ranks. Lieut. Pellew, 1st Batn., sailed from Cape Town for England on the 18th inst. in the Armenian, invalided.

East Yorkshire Regiment (15th).—Major Sladen sailed from Cape Town for England in the Armenian, invalided.

Leicestershire Regiment (17th).—Lieut. Weldon, 1st Batn., is acting as A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Upton Prior, commanding the Curragh District.

Royal Irish Regiment (18th).—Capt. Briggs, 4th (Militia) Batn., has been selected for service with the Kumasi expedition, and leaves England to-day.

Yorkshire Regiment (19th).—Lieut. Morris, 2nd Batn., is a candidate for the Indian Staff Corps, and has been appointed to the 8th Bombay Infantry. Lieut. Hobson, 4th (Militia) Batn., is doing duty as A.D.C. to Brig.-Gen. Lemon, C.B., commanding at Strensall.

Cheshire Regiment (22nd).—Major Grove, 2nd Batn., left England on Tuesday for South Africa, with drafts, in the Canada. Capt. Christian, 3rd (Militia) Batn., leaves England to-day for West Africa to join the Kumasi expedition. 2nd Lieut. Woolnough, 4th (Militia) Batn., sailed from Cape Town in the Armenian for England on the 18th inst., invalided.

Royal Welsh Fusiliers (23rd).—The Terrible landed at Tien-tsin on the 21st inst. 382 officers and men of the 2nd Batn., under command of Major Morris. They took part in the operations for the relief of Tien-tsin. Capt. Webber, 2nd Batn., sailed from Cape Town in the Assaye on the 18th inst., invalided.

South Wales Borderers (24th).—Major Curll, 1st Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for one year, on urgent private affairs. Major Sladen, 4th (Militia) Batn., has been selected for special service with the Kumasi Expedition, and leaves England to-day. Capt. Gillespie and 2nd Lieut. Gwynn, 2nd Batn., left England for the Cape on Tuesday with drafts in the Canada.

King's Own Scottish Borderers (25th).—Details left Belfast yesterday for York to be attached to the 4th Batn. Northumberland Fusiliers.

Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers (27th).—Lieut. Young is on passage home from the Cape, invalided. He left in the Assaye on the 18th inst. 2nd Lieut. Roe, 4th (Militia) Batn., leaves England to-day for the Gold Coast to join the Kumasi Expedition.

Gloucestershire Regiment (28th).—Major Wallace, says a Reuter's telegram, has been appointed Marriage Commissioner for Pretoria.

Worcestershire Regiment (29th).—Capt. Chichester sailed from Cape Town for England in the Assaye on the 18th inst., invalided.

East Lancashire Regiment (30th).—Details left the Curragh yesterday for Dublin, and are attached to the 4th Batn. King's Regiment.

Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry (32nd).—Capt. Burder has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on medical certificate.

Duke of Wellington's Regiment (33rd).—Details left Cork on Tuesday for Dublin, and are attached to the 3rd Batn. King's Regiment.

Border Regiment (34th).—Capt. Stack is acting as A.A.G. of the Egyptian Army in the absence of Brevet-Major Pedley, Connaught Rangers, on leave in England.

Royal Sussex Regiment (35th).—2nd Lieut. Paget sailed from Cape Town for England in the Assaye on the 18th inst., invalided.

Welsh Regiment (41st).—Details are attached to the 4th Batn. Royal Welsh Fusiliers at Devonport.

Oxfordshire Light Infantry (43rd).—2nd Lieut. Logan sailed from Cape Town for England in the Armenian on the 18th inst., invalided.

Essex Regiment (44th).—Brevet-Lieut.-Col. Tudway sailed from Southampton on Tuesday in command of reinforcements proceeding to the Cape in the transport Canada.

Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry (46th).—Capt. Grant was taken prisoner by the Boers at Roodevaal on the 7th inst.

Oxfordshire Light Infantry (52nd).—Col. Plowden has been granted an extension of command until Sept. 30.

Middlesex Regiment (57th).—Lieut. Lewis-Lloyd, attached to the West African Frontier Force, left England on Wednesday in the Sokoto for the Gold Coast, to join the expedition to Kumasi.

King's Royal Rifles (60th).—Writing to his diocesan magazine, the Bishop of Natal says that he has been approached by Lady Roberts with the view of having the piece of ground where her son Lieut. Roberts is buried consecrated. This would provide for the grave being kept up. The land must first be acquired, and then, after consecration, it becomes a part of the regular duties of the Archdeacon at his annual visitation to see that the graveyard is properly cared for and maintained as a sacred spot.

Manchester Regiment (63rd).—Capt. Stevenson, 1st Batn., attached to the West African Frontier Force, left England in the Sokoto on Wednesday for the Gold Coast, on active service. Capt. Symes, 6th

Reviews.

TWENTY FAMOUS NAVAL BATTLES.

In preparing a survey of Naval History from Salamis to Santiago it was, of course, necessary to make a selection of events, and this is what has been done in Twenty Famous Naval Battles (Isbister and Co.), by Edward Kirk Rawson, Superintendent of the Naval War Record of the United States, and, we believe, a Professor at the Naval Academy. The book is important in aspect, and the subject fills two handsome and well-printed volumes. It was written for American readers, and to them will more especially appeal, since about one-half of it is devoted to actions in which American ships have been engaged. A want of proportion is implied by such an arrangement, and it is an obvious criticism that there are "naval battles" better worth describing than the contest between the Monitor and the Merrimac, or that between the Kearsarge and the Alabama, which, in fact, were not battles at all, but only single-ship actions. It does not appear that Professor Rawson has contributed much that is new to his subject. We give him credit for a diligent investigation of authorities, though it would not be difficult to point out some errors into which he has fallen. Salamis, Actium, Lepanto, and the defeat of the Spanish Armada have, of course, been many times described, and the materials are ample. The same is true of the famous fight of the Revenge, and of a number of some actions which are included in the book. The only battle of our Dutch wars which finds a place is that of Nov. 28, 1652, and we cannot say that the reader will gain a true idea of what the war was about, or will be especially able to appreciate the tactical character of the action in question. From Dungeness we are carried on to La Hougue, and then take a great leap to the memorable fight between the Bonhomme Richard and the Serapis, and to the battle of the Nile. Thus, not one of the very notable actions in the West Indies finds a place in Professor Rawson's book. It is a huge gap, only to be explained by recognising that the Professor felt bound to devote a very disproportionate space to the single-ship action he describes. The account of Trafalgar is not luminous, and is, indeed, weak and inadequate. It does not bear the impress of a full understanding of the action, and sufficient space has not been allotted to it. Professor Rawson is more at home when he deals with the fight between the Constitution and the Guerrière, and with various other actions which fill his second volume, including Manila Bay and Santiago. He writes very much from the American standpoint, and is, perhaps, not quite impartial in his account of the war of 1812. A book like this is obviously intended for popular reading, and not for students of naval history. We believe it has had a wide sale in the United States, where the fine spirit that fills it has conduced to its success. The chapters on the battles of Manila Bay and Santiago embody very careful accounts of the actions based upon the large literature which has appeared since the war, and are distinctly valuable. The author generally writes in a pleasant and popular style. The illustrations and diagrams are all good and add much to the value of an interesting book.

SHORTER NOTICES.

The Oxfordshire Light Infantry Chronicle for 1899 (Eyre and Spottiswoode), compiled and edited by Major A. F. Mockler-Ferryman, is the eighth volume of a remarkable serial issue. No other regiment in the British Army has quite such a book to itself, and great credit is due to the committee and to the editor who have achieved such success. The volume is an annual record of the 1st and 2nd Batns. of the Oxfordshire Light Infantry, formerly the 43rd and 52nd Foot. The various calendars and records of the year are as good as ever. Great disappointment prevailed that the 1st Batn. of the regiment was not mobilised for service with the 1st Army Corps in South Africa, but the reasons for the omission are explained in this book. The battalion went out with the 6th Division under Gen. Kelly-Kenny, and Major Mockler-Ferryman has embodied a useful record of its good service. The historical part of the book is extremely interesting, and we should have been glad to find space for many things it contains. There is a capital portrait, with a biography, of Lieut.-Gen. James Kennedy, who was colonel of the 43rd from 1746 to 1761, and other sections deal with regimental service in Spain, at New Orleans, and in other parts of the world, where one or other of the battalions has done good service. The chronicle is as well illustrated as any of its predecessors, and that is saying a good deal.

Messrs. Griffin, of Portsmouth, have published a most useful little volume, entitled A Battleship Commander's Order Book, by Commander Sir R. K. Arbuthnot. The book was specially compiled for the Royal Sovereign, but is full of practical suggestions for other battleships, although, of course, the same orders cannot always be accepted for every battleship and station. It is, however, perfectly clear that with this book before him the executive officer of a newly-commissioned ship will very easily and quickly make out the orders, organisation, and routine that are necessary. Nothing that concerns the internal economy of a battleship seems wanting in the little book, which is devoted to duties both at sea and in port. We have great pleasure in emphatically commending a volume that must be very helpful to many.

The German Maritime Code, translated by W. Arnold (Effingham Wilson), embodies the regulations which came into force on Jan. 1, based upon the German General Mercantile Law passed in 1897. The book will be very useful to the commercial community.

Among dictionaries of foreign languages, those upon the Sachs-Villatte system have a great reputation on the Continent, and Messrs. H. Grevel and Co. have recently published in England the Muret-Sanders Encyclopædic German-English and English-German Dictionary, based upon that principle. It is an abridgement of the larger work, but still makes a ponderous volume. We have looked at it with some care, and it appears to be very adequate and complete, both in literary and technical respects. The phonetic values are indicated upon the system adopted in the works of Toussaint-Langenscheidt, and the book is published in Berlin at the Langenscheidtsche Verlagsbuchhandlung.

V.C.'s FOR GALLANTRY AT KORN SPRUIT.

It is announced in Tuesday evening's Gazette that the Queen has been graciously pleased to confirm the grant of the decoration of the Victoria Cross to the undermentioned officer, non-commissioned officer, and soldiers, which decoration has been provisionally conferred upon them by the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief in South Africa, in accordance with the rules laid down in the Warrant instituting the decoration, for their conspicuous bravery during the action at Korn Spruit on March 31:—

"Major Edmund John Phipps-Hornby, Q Battery, R.H.A.—On the occasion of the action at Korn Spruit on March 31, a British force, including two batteries of Royal Horse Artillery, was retiring from Thabanchu towards Bloemfontein. The enemy had formed an ambush at Korn Spruit, and before their presence was discovered by the main body had captured the greater portion of the baggage column and five out of the six guns of the leading battery. When the alarm was given Q Battery, Royal Horse Artillery, was within 300 yards of the spruit. Major Phipps-Hornby, who commanded it, at once wheeled about and moved off at a gallop under a very heavy fire. One gun upset when a wheel horse was shot, and had to be abandoned, together with a waggon, the horses of which were killed. The remainder of the battery reached a position close to some unfinished railway buildings and came into action 1,150 yards from the spruit, remaining in action until ordered to retire. When the order to retire was received, Major Phipps-Hornby ordered the guns and their limbers to be run back by hand to where the teams of uninjured horses stood behind the unfinished buildings. The few remaining gunners, assisted by a number of officers and men of a party of mounted infantry, and directed by Major Phipps-Hornby and Capt. Humphreys, the only remaining officers of the battery, succeeded in running back four of the guns under shelter. One or two of the limbers were similarly withdrawn by hand, but the work was most severe and the distance considerable. In consequence, all concerned were so exhausted that they were unable to drag in the remaining limbers or the fifth gun. It now became necessary to risk the horses, and volunteers were called for from among the drivers, who readily responded. Several horses were killed and men wounded, but at length only one gun and one limber were left exposed. Four separate attempts were made to rescue these, but when no more horses were available the attempt had to be given up and the gun and limber were abandoned. Meanwhile the other guns had been sent on, one at a time, and after passing within 700 or 800 yards of the enemy, in rounding the head of a donga and crossing two spruits they eventually reached a place of safety, where the battery was re-formed. After full consideration of the circumstances of the case the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief in South Africa formed the opinion that the conduct of all ranks of Q Battery, Royal Horse Artillery, was conspicuously gallant and daring, but that all were equally brave and devoted in their behaviour. He therefore decided to treat the case of the battery as one of collective gallantry under Rule 13 of the Victoria Cross Warrant, and directed that one officer should be selected for the decoration of the Victoria Cross by the officers, one non-commissioned officer by the non-commissioned officers, and two gunners or drivers by the gunners and drivers. A difficulty arose with regard to the officer, owing to the fact that there were only two unwounded officers—Major Phipps-Hornby and Capt. Humphreys—available for the work of saving the guns, and both of these had been conspicuous by their gallantry and by the fearless manner in which they exposed themselves, and each of them nominated the other for the decoration. It was ultimately decided in favour of Major Phipps-Hornby as having been the senior officer concerned.

"Sergt. Charles Parker, Q Batt. R.H.A., was elected by the non-commissioned officers, as described above."

"Gunner Isaac Lodge and Driver Henry Glasscock, Q Batt. R.H.A., were elected by the gunners and drivers, as described above."

THE SITUATION IN CHINA.

BY the relief of Tien-tsin and of the force with which Sir Edward Seymour attempted to reach Peking a state of extreme public anxiety has been brought to an end. The situation which has arisen in China is, nevertheless, one of extreme gravity, and it is now, unfortunately, only too clear that the widespread nature of the conspiracy against Europeans was realised too late. It had been supposed that we were confronted by a rabble of Boxers. Now it is beyond question that we are engaged with whatever force the Dowager Empress can direct. The ominous silence which descended upon events after the arrival of Sir Edward Seymour at Lang-fang on the 12th aroused most gloomy feelings. Three weeks since, the force of 2,000 men who marched with him might well have been adequate, but events developed with great rapidity, and Prince Tuan, that well-known hater of Europeans, sent his forces against Tien-tsin. It was not, indeed, until the allied admirals at Taku received information that the Chinese authorities had ordered trains to convey troops to attack the place, to ravage Tong-ku, and to reinforce the Taku forts and mine the Peiho River, that they took action. The concert between the admirals was all that could have been desired, and the operation was successfully conducted, thereby removing a great obstacle to the subsequent operations. At the same time, it is the opinion in some circles that the attack on the Taku forts roused the fanatical fury of the Chinese, and that the immediate effect was to increase the difficulty of the position at Tien-tsin, and that it seriously affected the operations of Admiral Seymour. It is, however, too early to express an opinion on that point. For a fortnight direct communication with Tien-tsin was cut off, and there is yet no knowledge of the real situation at the capital, so that we have been dependent upon conflicting reports from Chinese sources, which do not command respect. The most serious intelligence that came to light was of the desperate character of the attack on Tien-tsin, followed by that of the investment of Sir Edward Seymour's force. The place, in the words of Rear-Admiral Bruce, has fought for its life, and the attack on the foreign settlements was delivered with great fierceness, and urgent appeals were made for reinforcements and ammunition. The British Consul telegraphed: "Reinforcements urgently needed, casualties heavy, ammunition insufficient, machine guns required. Russians at railroad station hard pressed. Chinese troops keep up incessant fire with large guns on European concessions, nearly all of which are burnt." Thus, under blind fury, perished some of those foreign settlements which constitute, next after Shanghai, the wealthiest and most flourishing foreign city in China. The Terrible arrived at Taku on the 21st to land troops and a brigade with naval guns, and a relief column was formed. Commander Cradock landed with the Naval Brigade, and Mr. Brodrick has stated in the House of Commons that the relief operations were under command of a Russian major-general, with a German officer as second in command, assisted by Captain Warrender, of the Barfleur. Intelligence of the relief of the place was received at Taku on Monday. According to a Reuter's telegram the British and American forces were the first to enter Tien-tsin, after silencing the Chinese guns and breaking through the investing line. It is noteworthy that Admiral Alexieff's despatch contains no reference to our share in the relief. Colonel Anissimoff, he says, was very hard pressed, having seven officers and 150 men killed and wounded, and General Stoessel fought his way through the opposite forces. The relief forces also included Germans and Japanese, the latter apparently under command of General Fukushima. The casualties at Tien-tsin up to the forenoon of the 23rd were 4 seamen killed, 3 officers and 11 men seriously and 1 officer and 4 men dangerously wounded, and 3 officers and 25 seamen slightly wounded. The ships affected by these casualties were the Barfleur, Orlando, Aurora, and Endymion. The gravest apprehension was felt in the early part of the week in regard to the column under the Commander-in-Chief, but reassuring intelligence at last arrived. It is stated from more than one source that he heliographed for relief from a place nine or ten miles north of Tien-tsin on Sunday, saying that unless it arrived he could not hold out more than two days. He had seized a small arsenal called Wuku, and was being heavily bombarded and hard pressed by hordes of Chinese, and according to the latest report had a total of 62 killed and 212 wounded. A column was immediately formed to march to his relief, and full intelligence concerning its operations cannot be long delayed. The force included Royal Welsh Fusiliers, Sikhs, American Marines, German seamen, and Japanese infantry, and was under command of Colonel Dorward, R.E. Admiral Seymour's force was extricated at a point near Lo-fa on Wednesday evening. He had been fighting continuously for 15 days, and the men were in a state of great exhaustion. Finding it impossible to force his way to Peking, he had attempted to return to Tien-tsin, but being beset by greatly superior forces, had been compelled to entrench the favourable position he seized, and to await relief. Our Consul at Tien-tsin telegraphed yesterday that Capt. H. W. H. Beyts, R.M.A., was killed, and that 7 officers were wounded, and that the casualties among the men were 24 killed and 91 wounded.

In a message from the Inspector-General of Customs it was stated that the foreign Legations had been desired to leave Peking within twenty-four hours, but they are still believed to be in the capital. The foreign detachments at Peking numbered 79 British, 58 Americans, 75 Russians, 75 French, 30 Austrians, 50 Germans, 40 Italians, and 23 Japanese—making 430 in all. Most alarming statements have been circulated as to the destruction of the Embassies, and according to late information there has been fierce rioting in the eastern part of the Tartar city, where several churches had been burnt down and hundreds of native Christians and servants in the employ of Europeans had been massacred. There was certainly no adequate force to protect this European quarter, if a determined attack should be made upon it, for it was quite possible for the Chinese to mount heavy guns upon the city walls, which command it entirely. It does not appear likely that hostilities can be limited to the province of Chihli. Grave disorder prevails at New-chwang, where the Russians are not in sufficient force. The situation at Wei-hai-Wei is also not reassuring, for a large force of Boxers is in the neighbourhood, and it is feared that telegraphic communication with Chefoo may be cut. Preparations are being made by all the Powers to despatch reinforcements to Taku. Our Indian contingent, under command of General Sir A. Gaselee, with Generals Sir N. Stewart and Creagh, commanding brigades, is to comprise two infantry brigades each of four battalions, with divisional troops, a cavalry regiment, three companies of sappers and miners, and a field battery, with two battalions to guard the line of communications. The troops from Hong-Kong had reached Taku at the beginning of the week, when 3,000 Japanese, 2,000 French, and 1,000 Germans had arrived, or were on the point of doing so. The United States Government has decided to withdraw a large number of American troops now in Cuba and to send them to the Philippines, thus enabling General MacArthur to despatch at least 2,500 men to Taku. It may certainly be expected that the allied forces will soon gain the mastery in Chihli, but it is much to be feared that this will not be accomplished until great injury has been done to the lives, property and interests of Europeans of all nationalities. The formation of the naval expeditionary force under Sir Edward Seymour has been the subject of questions put to Mr. Goschen by Sir John Colomb and Mr. T. G. Bowles. The First Lord explained that the Vice-Admiral himself suggested that he should take command of the column, believing that most of the foreign officers would assent, and the Admiralty sanctioned the arrangement. There does not seem to be adequate information at Whitehall as to the composition of Admiral Seymour's force, though it is understood to comprise 736 men, chiefly drawn from the Centurion, Endymion, and Aurora. The total complements of the ships on the station number about 7,000, and the Jelunga leaves Portsmouth to-day with 840 naval ratings to take the place of the parties landed. French marine troops to the number of 2,500 were to leave Toulon yesterday, and the German additional contingent is of considerable strength. The Goliath is now well on her way to China, with the Victorious, which returns to the station, and the Dido and Isis both from the Mediterranean, and the Argonaut is to follow. The additional foreign ships to be sent to China, or already on their way, are the Guichen, Amiral Charner, and Friant for France; the Carlo Alberto, Vettor Pisani, Stromboli, and Vesuvio for Italy; the Fürst Bismarck for Germany; and the Maria Theresia for Austria.

Navy Notes.

The Admiralty has kept its secret in regard to the manœuvres, but no doubt next week more particulars will be disclosed. The ships in the Fleet Reserve are being brought forward for commission, and those to be mobilised will hoist the pennant on July 10. There are indications that the manœuvres are to be on a larger scale than in recent years, and we may express the hope that they will be of such a nature and under such rules as will give them greater value than could properly be applied to them on recent occasions. The Camperdown has had her extensive overhaul and refit hurried forward, so that she may join the Reserve Fleet. The Edinburgh is to mobilise for the operations, as well as the old Sultan, which has never been commissioned since she was raised from the bottom of the Comino Channel. The commissioning of this ship has led to some criticism, but it appears that she is only to serve as a depôt with torpedo-boats. The following are the ships ordered to be specially commissioned:—At Chatham and Sheerness the Dreadnought and Edinburgh, the cruisers Immortalité, Mersey, Prometheus, Blenheim, Hawke, Pioneer, Perseus, and Medusa, and the gunboats Gleaner, Alarm, and Circe, with four torpedo-boats; at Portsmouth the Sultan and Hero, the cruisers Ariadne, Gibraltar, Latona, Brilliant, Naiad, Gladiator, and Hecla, and the gunboats Spanker, Sheldrake, and Leader, with twelve torpedo-boats; and at Devonport the Conqueror, the cruisers Blake, Apollo, Edgar, Retribution, Talbot, Rainbow, Æolus, Phæbe, and Andromache, and the gunboats Renard, Sharpshooter, Antelope, Speedwell, and Skipjack, with eight torpedo-boats. The instructional flotillas of torpedo-boats at the ports will also take part in the operations. The Vindictive is being commissioned to take part in the manœuvres preparatory to leaving for the Mediterranean.

It appears probable that after the manœuvres the Reserve Squadron will be reorganised. Many rumours are afloat as to the intentions of the Admiralty, and it may be taken as certain that steps will be adopted to make the Reserve Squadron a more efficient force than it is at the present time. One statement is that the ships will have full complements, and will spend most of their time at sea, with Portland as their headquarters, while their places at the various ports will be taken by older ships. We believe, however, that this is only a surmise.

The question put to Mr. Goschen by Sir Fortescue Flannery on Thursday, asking for an explanation of the falling off in the speed of the Terrible on her passage from Hong Kong to Taku, and in regard to the leaky tubes of the Hermes in mid-ocean, was intended to raise once more the question of the efficiency of the water-tube boiler. We do not doubt that this class of boiler has come to stay, notwithstanding the outcry of its opponents. The subject is, of course, one for legitimate discussion, and we do not regret that the question has been raised, though perhaps the urgency of the critics might be more usefully applied to the investigation of the merits of various types of water-tube boilers than to the condemnation of the class. The opponents of the water-tube boiler contend that no sufficiently long sea passage has taken place to prove the endurance of such boilers when working at their highest power. The Admiralty will be well advised to make public all useful particulars of trials, so that confidence may be given and controversies be ended. At the present time the advocates of the old class of boilers never lose an opportunity of airing their views.

Mr. Goschen's answer to his questioners was the promise of a complete explanation. He desires on Vote 8 to make a very full statement, not only concerning Belleville boilers but those of other types. The whole question of boilers and machinery will be gone into. This is eminently satisfactory, and pending the explanation little need be said. The First Lord set Sir Fortescue Flannery right in regard to the date of the Terrible's arrival, and gave the House to understand that she steamed at the speed she was instructed to travel at, and also that he believed the machinery to be thoroughly efficient. Touching the breakdown of the Hermes, Mr. Goschen explained that it was due to the feed pumps being out of order. They were right when she left England, but, owing to the injudicious treatment of some one on board, slight defects which were developed grew worse, and serious damage was done by working the boilers without sufficient water. The health of the staff engineer in charge, unfortunately, did not enable him to exercise the necessary supervision, and he has since been invalided.

The cruise of the Mediterranean Squadron to the western ports of Italy was brought to a conclusion on Monday, when Sir John Fisher left Castellamare for Malta, preparatory to paying a visit to Trieste, where the squadron is expected on July 9. At all the Italian ports the fleet was received with great warmth. When the ships were in the Gulf of Aranci, the Italian officers at Maddalena were most thoughtful in their good offices, and the Italian Admiral sent a steamer to convey perishable supplies from the Cagliari market. At Castellamare the fleet received quite an ovation, and the civil authorities vied with the naval officials in their efforts to make pleasant the visit of the squadron.

In continuation of the trials for testing the defences of Portsmouth, a well-planned surprise attack was made at the end of last week by the destroyers Fawn and Violet. In the dark hours of Friday night or Saturday morning they attempted to rush the Needles defences. The vessels went out of harbour on Friday morning to carry out their prize firing, but this was prevented by the rough weather. They therefore lay to off Anvil Point until soon after ten o'clock at night, and with deadlights closed and all deck lights extinguished, crept up to the Needles, the Violet having a twenty minutes' lead of the Fawn. Speed was kept down to thirteen knots in order that the boats might not be discovered by the smoke and flame from their own funnels, but, when within two miles of the defences a rocket was sent up to show that the leading boat had been detected. She at once put on full speed ahead, but the whole of the searchlights at the Needles and Hurst Castle were turned on, and the boat, rushing the channel only eighty yards wide, was fired upon by the guns on both sides of the channel. The Fawn had the same experience, and the conclusion arrived at was that no boat could have got through after detection, seeing that for four or five miles the vessels were constantly under observation. The night was favourable for the boats, as there was no moon and a strong but fair wind.

We have not the smallest wish to convey the belief that all is as it should be at Whitehall. There has never yet been any adequate reason given for the failure to spend the money voted by Parliament for new construction, and the foreigner is coming to the conclusion that there is a limit to our building power. At the same time, we are convinced that the Navy League must put forth more cogent arguments than those discursively advanced in the July number of its journal by Mr. Arnold White. He begins with the curious statement that shells are made in Germany for the British Government, and that he saw a quantity of them being transhipped from a cargo-boat into the Bremer Castle at Gibraltar, whither they had been brought as bogus cheese, hams, and butter from Trieste. The farce led him to the conclusion that we are not ready at sea. We have no adequate number either of battleships or cruisers. He surely misses a point, however, where he urges that our cruisers should bear relation to the extent of our trade. This expresses only half a truth, for the relation must be to the forces available to attack our commerce, or to the active work assigned to these cruisers. Then we are told that our battleships being too few, "cruisers and catchers will be compelled to do their work." "The enemy's battleships will be attacked by British heroes in small vessels." It was well that Mr. Arnold White forewarned his readers by saying, "I possess no knowledge whatever of naval affairs." He did himself justice. He is not content with demanding battleships and cruisers and a real second line to the Channel Squadron—both reasonable requests—but goes on to ask for "floating machine and repairing shops, swift colliers, with hatches cut to fit battleships and cruisers of one class, hospital ships, refrigerating vessels, store, restaurant, water-condensing and laundry ships." Nay, more. He asks for "spare admirals with dormant commissions, spare captains to come on duty at night or when required, and the whole question of the nerve-strain on officers in a fighting fleet thought out and prepared for." Failing all this, we are in a "Fool's Paradise." Perhaps we are, but such statements as these will not convince anyone, and it is doing poor service to a good cause to put them forward.

It is satisfactory to learn by a letter which recently appeared in a contemporary that the late Lieut. R. D. Scott, of the Pheasant, did not meet with his death through any friction between the naval and military authorities at Esquimaux, as was at first reported. For some reason not explained, Lieut. Scott was directed to visit the military sentries posted in the dockyard, and the night being dark, he missed his way and found himself on the parapet of a fort. Challenged by the sentry, the officer appears to have failed to make himself heard, with the regrettable result that the soldier fired upon him and inflicted a fatal injury. We are glad of this explanation, but it still seems unwise to permit sentries to fire upon all and sundry, except in war or cases of danger to public property. Also it would be interesting to learn the precise circumstances in which the deceased naval officer was required to visit military sentries, since this is not one of the usual duties of a naval officer.

The Admiralty cannot afford to ignore a letter which recently appeared in the Engineer, signed by a "Commander, R.N." According to this letter, one of the Channel Squadron battleships shows evidences of scamped work, a large number of rivet-holes of certain bulkheads having been found to be filled in with putty. The vessel, it is further stated, is a dockyard-built ship, which renders it the more desirable that the persons responsible for this neglect should be brought to book. Meanwhile, however, the defects have been reported to the Admiralty through the official channels, so that "Commander's" object in writing to the Engineer is scarcely evident, unless we suppose that he believes the Admiralty to be inactive in the matter.

Five of Nelson's letters were disposed of at the sale of the Peel collection at Willis's Rooms, all of which are included in the "Despatches and Letters." The bidding was eager, and high prices were realised. Very great interest was shown in a letter of Lady Hamilton's in relation to Horatia, in which she says, urging her "claims," "John Bull is not ungrateful for services rendered to him and his country." The happy possessor paid £33 for this, and it appears that Mr. Emanuel, of Portsmouth, was next in the running.

The Royal yacht is now stowing her ballast at Portsmouth, and it is intended that her steam trials shall begin on August 18. The ballast to be stowed in order to give the requisite degree of stability is 250 tons, and the effect will be to add 2ft. to the original draught. The masts are being placed in position again and the funnel casings are being fitted, and the yacht will be out of dock in about a week's time. Before the sea trials in August a complete trial of the auxiliary machinery will be made.

Navy Personal.

The Duke of York holds a Levée at St. James's Palace on Friday next.

Admiral of the Fleet Sir Frederick Richards presides on Wednesday next at a dinner at the Whitehall rooms, given by the members of the Royal Naval Club, 1765-85, to the First Lord of the Admiralty.

Admiral Sir M. Culme-Seymour, Bart., A.D.C., Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, will be honoured with the presence of H.R.H. the Duke of York at Admiralty House during the coming week.

Admirals Sir Erasmus Ommanney, Sir F. Leopold M'Clintock, Sir Anthony Hoskins, the Hon. W. J. Ward, and Rear-Admiral Sir William Wharton, Hydrographer of the Admiralty, were present at a meeting of the Royal Geographical Society in the London University on Monday last, when Mr. C. E. Borchgrevink, late of the Southern Cross, lectured on the "Result of the Sir George Newnes' Antarctic Expedition." The distinguished explorer announced the pleasing incident of hoisting the Union Jack, presented by H.R.H. the Duke of York, on Victoria Land, March 1, last year.

Vice-Admiral Sir John Fisher, Commander-in-Chief of the Mediterranean Squadron, was honoured with a visit from Lord Currie, H.M.'s Ambassador at Rome, on Friday in last week, on board the Renown at Castellamare, his Excellency having come from Civita Vecchia in the Surprise.

Vice-Admiral Ernest Rice, late Admiral Superintendent of Portsmouth Dockyard, is president of a special committee, assembled at that establishment, to inquire as to the suitability of the present rations to the requirements of the personnel of the Fleet, and make suggestions for their alteration and improvement. The present allowance of provisions was introduced in September, 1850, and has virtually remained unaltered. The canteen question in the Navy will also be considered. It is undoubtedly a complicated matter to arrange, especially when opinions largely differ as to the method of administration.

Rear-Admiral T. S. Jackson, Superintendent of Devonport Dockyard, struck his flag on Saturday last, and proceeded on leave for one month. Captain W. Marrack, of the Dockyard Reserve, performs the Rear-Admiral's duties during his absence.

Rear-Admiral Bouverie Clark, Director of Transports, has, we regret to say, been obliged to withdraw from duty for a time in consequence of ill-health, due, undoubtedly, to the heavy pressure of work that the South African War has entailed upon his department. Rear-Admiral G. T. H. Boyes, who relieved Rear-Admiral Clark as flag-captain in the Anson in 1891, now temporarily undertakes his duties at the Admiralty.

Rear-Admiral H. L. Pearson, Commander-in-Chief of the Australian Squadron, arrived at Auckland on Sunday, and leaves to-day for Wellington, the seat of government in New Zealand. The gallant Admiral on the same day attains the age of fifty-seven.

Rear-Admiral Charles Drury, Vice-President of the Ordnance Committee, and Lieut. R. F. Scott were elected members of the Royal Geographical Society on Monday last.

Rear-Admiral Rodney Lloyd, the senior of his rank on the active list, attains the age of fifty-eight on Tuesday next.

Captain the Hon. Hedworth Lambton opened the Naval and Military Bazaar at Olympia on Friday in last week, the concluding day of that attractive and patriotic display, and had with him Midshipmen J. R. Middleton, R. C. Hamilton, and Hon. Ian L. Carnegie, recently serving under his command in the Powerful. Several "handy men" were also present at the Powerful's stall, and proved themselves valuable assistants to the fair and noble stall-holders in securing a large amount of patronage from the numerous visitors.

Captains G. M. Henderson, of the Isis, and Philip F. Tillard, of the Dido, left Malta on Saturday last to join the China Squadron.

Captain John Denison, of the Melpomene, pays off that cruiser at Portsmouth on Thursday next.

Captain E. P. Jones, of the Forte, the able commander of the Naval Brigade and Natal Naval Volunteers, attached to Sir Redvers Buller's force in South Africa, has been directed to proceed to Durban and re-embark the naval contingent in their respective ships. Sir Redvers in a general order stated that the Naval Brigade left his command amidst the sincere regret of all ranks and arms of the Service, and in wishing them good-bye assured them that they carried with them the gratitude and best wishes of their comrades of the Natal Field Force.

Captain Lewis Wintz, of the Goliath, having reached the Suez end of the Canal on Friday in last week, left on Monday for China on completing with coal.

Captain W. H. May and the officers of the Excellent gave their annual ball at Whale Island last evening.

Captain Percy Scott, of the Terrible, has again proved himself equal to an emergency. On the 21st inst. he arrived off Taku with troops from Hong Kong and disembarked them. Forty-eight hours afterwards he was ready with a Naval Brigade and mobile naval guns for service on shore.

Captain F. E. Brock, of the Highflyer, after numerous delays succeeded last Wednesday afternoon in getting away from Devonport to relieve the Eclipse in the East Indies, where it is hoped he will arrive without further mishap to the cruiser he commands.

Captain C. H. Cross, of the Victorious, proceeds to China in consequence of the present complications with the Celestial Empire. The vessel he commands only returned last month from the Far East.

Captain C. H. Cochran, of the Pegasus, returns home, after being barely eighteen months in commission, to pay off and commission the Sappho at Chatham, returning to the South-East Coast of America. It will be remembered that in the early part of the year a merchant vessel unpleasantly collided with the cruiser he now commands while at anchor on that station.

Captain Henry Leah, of the Diana, is due at Plymouth on Tuesday next with paid-off crews from Australia.

Commander C. G. Cradock, of the Alacrity, landed with a naval contingent of 250 men at Tong-ku, on the northern bank of the Peiho River, and proceeded to the front.

Commander J. B. Eustace, late of the Hood, leaves to-day on the transport Jelunga for China, in command of a large naval force.

Commander J. F. Parry, relieved from command of the Dart after nearly five years' surveying service on the Australian station, and Naval Instructor H. H. Barton, invalided from the Royal Oak, arrived home on Friday in last week by the Orient s.s. Ortona.

Staff Captain Charles Brent and Lieut. W. H. Montanaro, who have hitherto conducted the instruction in pilotage at Portsmouth, are to be transferred next month to the Royal Naval College, Greenwich. Captain Brent's removal we referred to last year, when he was mentioned for the Staff Captain's appointment at Devonport.

Lieut. R. E. Scott, commander-elect of the British Antarctic expedition, was a guest of the Royal Society's Club at their annual banquet last week, presided over by the Lord Chancellor. Lieut. C. W. R. Royds, of the Crescent, will be second in command of the expeditionary vessel Discoverer, which is to be built at Dundee.

Sub-Lieuts. G. O. Stephenson, of the Ramilhies, and M. K. Grant, of the Fawn, are promoted Lieutenant after twenty-four and eighteen months' seniority respectively, in consideration of the positions they attained at the Royal Naval College and other examinations.

Fleet-Paymaster A. H. Sherris, of the Vernon, has been placed on the retired list in consequence of ill-health. Otherwise he could have remained on active service for the next eight years.

Surgeon A. R. Bankart, of the Osborne, attended his Highness the Khedive while under treatment on board the Royal yacht.

Major F. G. Kappey, Captain Hugo Worthington, and Lieut. T. B. A. Leahy, R.M.A.; Captains C. McN. Parsons and Barry O'Sullivan, and Lieuts. H. S. H. Richmond, James Hazel, and G. C. Rooney embark to-day with nearly 400 rank and file of the Royal Marine forces in the transport Jelunga for China.

Captain F. R. Godfrey, R.M.L.I. (Plymouth) embarks in the Camperdown when commissioned at Portsmouth on Thursday next.

Lieuts. John Grover, disembarked from the Revenge on Friday in last week, and L. O. Wilson, serving in South Africa, are appointed Assistant-Instructors of Musketry at the dépôt and Chatham Division, respectively, in place of Lieuts. Scott and Luard recently promoted.

Lord Loch, the eminent Colonial Governor, who died last week, joined the Royal Navy in 1840 as a cadet, at the age of twelve, and left it two years afterwards. He was well known among naval officers, and there were present at his funeral on Monday last, Admiral the Hon. W. J. Ward, Rear-Admiral the Hon. Victor Montagu, Captains Sir Alfred Jephson and the Hon. J. M. Yorke, and Lieut. G. R. Maltby. His lordship was attached to Lord Elgin's mission to China, 1858-60; and, after Admiral Sir James Hope took the Taku forts in the latter year, was treacherously captured at Tung-Chau, twelve miles from Peking, with twenty-seven other Europeans, thirteen of whom were killed or afterwards died, which latter incident induced Lord Elgin to destroy the Imperial Summer Palace and its vast environment.

Navy Foreign.

The report of Admiral Bendemann, commanding the German Division at Taku, states that the Itis was "the soul of the attack on the forts," and fought splendidly. The ship was not materially injured, but eight were killed, including an officer, four were seriously wounded, including the captain, and ten were slightly wounded. The newspapers in Germany, commenting on the action of the Itis, outbid one another in extravagant panegyrics, and the Berliner Neueste Nachrichten says:—"Let the building of our fleet be accelerated. We shall want it in view of these Chinese troubles, and in view also of the European complications which will arise out of them." The Emperor has conferred the order "Pour le Mérite" upon Captain Lans, commander of the Itis. The bestowal of the decoration was notified by signal to the war vessels lying in Kiel harbour.

The French ships in the Far East actually belonging to the squadron are the D'Entrecasteaux, Descartes, Jean Bart, Pascal, and the gunboat Surprise. The Jean Bart and Pascal arrived at Taku on the 20th. The Guichen left France for the China station at the end of last week, and the Friant and Amiral Charner have since followed. The Government transport Nive takes out two battalions of naval infantry and two batteries of artillery, which are to replace in Indo-China the troops already despatched to Taku from Saigon. The French forces now in China or at sea, and due to arrive between June 25 and July 3, number 2,000, and those which were to leave by the transports yesterday 2,200, making 4,200 in all.

The following ships take part in the French Naval manoeuvres of the combined Northern and Mediterranean Squadrons:—Mediterranean Squadron: Bouvet (flagship of Admiral Gervais), Brennus (flag of Vice-Admiral Fournier), Charles Martel, Charlemagne, Gaulois, and Jauréguiberry, battleships; the armoured cruisers Chanzy, Latouche-Tréville, and Pothuau; the protected cruisers Cassard, Du Chayla, D'Assas, Linois, Lavoisier, and Galilée; the destroyers Dunois and Hallebarde; the torpedo-boats Cyclone, Forban, Flibustier and Chevalier; and the coast defence division, comprising the Bouvines, Amiral Tréhouart, Jemmapes, and Valmy, with the torpedo dépôt ship Foudre. Northern Squadron: The Masséna (flag of Vice-Admiral Ménard), Carnot, Amiral Baudin, Formidable, Amiral Duperré, and Redoubtable; the armoured cruisers Dupuy de Lôme and Bruix; the protected cruiser D'Éstrées; the destroyers Fleurus, Cassini, La Hire, Framée, and Durandal, and the torpedo-boats Aquilon and Mangini. The review of the combined squadrons will take place on July 19.

When Admiral Gervais hoisted his flag in the Bouvet he issued an order of the day to the fleet, in which he expressed his delight at finding himself once more exercising a command, and alluded to the heavy responsibilities he assumed. He said that he counted with confidence upon the devotion of all, and that he knew the great qualities of the chiefs, the spirit of the officers, the disciplined ardour of the crews, and their present high state of training. As is always the case with French orders of the day, this of Admiral Gervais' was rhetorical, but it expressed the feelings of an officer very highly respected in the French Navy.

The Russians are peculiarly unfortunate in getting their ships ashore, and the frequency of the mishaps of this nature leads to a surmise that their seamanship is not all that it should be. The Rossia, Rurik, Apraxine, and several others have suffered within recent times, with many others, and the Minin is the latest addition to the list. She ran upon a sandbank near the island of Nargen, and was floated with difficulty by the tugs. An item of some interest concerning the Russian Navy relates to the strengthening of the Caspian flotilla. Last year six torpedo-boats were sent to these inland waters by way of the Volga canal, and it is now announced that a gunboat of 380 tons, steaming at 12 knots, is to be added to the flotilla.

THE "TERRIBLE" AND BOER WARFARE.

"Dec. 15.—For the battle of Colenso the two 4.7in. and four 12prs. were to go to a place 1,000 yards west of the railway and 3,000 yards south of the river, do all the harm to men, guns, and works that they could, and follow the troops across when ordered. Capt. Jones remained with these, the principal naval guns. The other six 12prs., under Lieut. Ogilvy, were attached to Col. Long's division and his two batteries of R.F.A., and were taken into effective rifle range. The six naval guns came into action—four of them with some difficulty, as their native drivers bolted and some of the oxen were shot. But Lieut. James's native drivers merely turned their coat collars up and worked their beasts as usual. It was a stiff piece of fighting, and the general ordered the six naval guns back. Lieut. James's guns came round and helped the principal naval guns to cover the retirement. It was a lovely, cloudless, still morning, and many began to think the Boers had gone. At 5.20 a.m. we opened fire without reply. At 5.40 a.m. the infantry attacks began to develop. Soon after that there was no question as to whether the Boers were there or not. We tried to crush the trench-fire, but what could two lyddite guns do when there were numberless trenches? The R.F.A. became a target for the Boer guns and were driven back too far to help the infantry. We went for the guns, of course, and when we spotted one it did not fire many more shots. In some cases we silenced the Boer guns absolutely, but there were some so placed that we could not see them. The naval guns did good work, but their hands were too full. We wanted many more long-range guns. But even so, without taking and holding Hlangwani Hill, it was an almost impossible position to get through, and at eleven o'clock we were ordered to retire. However, one cannot retire without oxen. These were three miles off and had to be fetched, so we just covered the retirement as far as we could and sent the guns back as the oxen arrived, but took care that the 4.7 guns went early. The writer came back with Lieut. James sitting on his last gun, and very ignominious it seemed to be jolting back about 2 p.m., being gently shelled the while. The Boers, by the way, did not pay us much attention during the day. A few shells and a few stray bullets came towards us, but nothing like what we expected. The guns with Col. Long had a warmer time and three of our men were hit. It was frightfully hot and parching. One saw men lapping up the filthiest puddle. Lieut. Ogilvy and Gunner Wright, both of the Terrible, were mentioned in despatches for their part in getting the guns out of the very nasty position into which they were taken. On Dec. 17 we arrived at Gun Hill, where we put our two 4.7in. and six 12prs. into position again and pitched camp. Ogilvy, with his six 12prs., moved back to Frere. At noon we fired a few shots from the 4.7in. guns at a range of 7,500 yards, just 4½ miles, but the light was bad and we ceased. In view of the varying conditions of light and the long ranges, we had a free hand about when to fire and when to desist. Wilde, with his two 12prs., was moved to a height 1,250 yards S.E. of us, to protect the right flank, so that the two 4.7in. guns and four 12prs. only remained on Gun Hill. And here we remained until Jan. 10, not knowing our next move. We learnt all about the surrounding country and harassed the Boers daily at odd hours. The long glass helped us a great deal, so much so that I believe one of the Boers said, 'If we catch one of those strawhatted gunners we will crucify him.' Our glass was an excellent gauge of the 'moral and intellectual' damage which we inflicted. Often the Colonial scouts would tell us what we had done. One day it was a small gun 'smashed up,' another day six men killed, and so on.

"On Christmas-day athletic sports were held. A feature of the day was an impromptu procession. The 4.7in. gun limber was drawn by the sailors, and accompanied by a few sailors mounted on mules, decorated with the straw envelopes of lime-juice bottles. A chief petty officer and petty officer of the Natal Naval Volunteers, dressed up respectively as John Bull and Mr. Kruger, rode on the limber. The dresses were clever and the faces fitted the parts splendidly. Oom Paul carried a very battered umbrella (borrowed from a native chieftain and carefully returned) which showed, as he explained, the 'terrible' effect of lyddite. The periodical hoisting of the white flag caused a great deal of amusement. Directly the tug-of-war was over—in which the Devons, who were the winners, beat our team—the two masqueraders jumped down and picked up the rope. John Bull thought he really must have reinforcements, but eventually pulled Kruger over and sat on him.

"The Naval Brigade moved off on Jan. 10, and on the 13th arrived at Spearman's. The guns were pulled over the bad places very successfully. The whole column in movement, especially at a drift, was a sight never to be forgotten. We bivouacked and ate whilst the general selected our position, and at 6 p.m. we were told to go to the left summit of Spearman's Hill, known as Mount Alice. We mounted the guns there at once and pitched camp afterwards. What a splendid commanding position it was!

"Nothing of note happened during the next two days, but on the 16th the army began slowly to move. On the 17th Lyttelton's Brigade were at Potgieter's Drift holding the low kopjes, also a battery of the R.F.A. with howitzers. At 5 a.m. our guns commenced on the trenches and continued at it all day.

"Jan. 18.—Slow firing at the Boer gun positions and trenches. I saw ten of our lyddite shells get home properly. The 12prs. were doing excellent work. At dusk we ceased fire, and the Boers returned to their trenches. This is typical of what happened on the days following. Our long range glass became an 'observation spot,' from which we noted and reported all that we saw.

"Jan. 24.—We saw a magnificent example of the Boer method of holding their ground. At one end of the hill-top under discussion there were, perhaps, 30 Boers. Fifteen of them were sitting with rifles between their knees and their backs against the boulders, screening them from our infantry. The rest were beautifully under cover, picking off and driving back our men. Why will not our Tommies do as the Boers do?—crawl on hands and knees and do anything to get cover and shoot from cover. On the 25th we were told that our people had evacuated Spion Kop. Incredible! But the long glass confirms it. The Boers are there, many with two rifles, gathering up water-bottles, leather gear, and trophies of that sort."

"Desultory firing during the next few days. On Feb. 2nd Ogilvy's six 12prs. were placed in position on Zwaart Kop—a fine piece of work—as well as two R.F.A. 15prs., and the mountain battery. The naval guns were, of course, the heaviest pieces there, and were hauled up by means of a 2in. steel hawser, with snatch blocks on suitable trees, a battalion being told off to haul. The R.F.A. guns went up in the same manner.

"Saturday, Feb. 3.—An order is issued for an attack on Vaal Krantz on Monday.

"Monday, Feb. 5.—The guns are now placed as follows:—Naval guns—No. 2 4.7in. Mount Alice, under Capt. Jones; No. 1 4.7in. Signal Hill, under Commander Limpus; six 12prs., Zwaart Kop, under Lieut. Ogilvy; two 12prs., the plateau below Mount Alice, Lieut. Burne.

"The fighting on the 6th and 7th is next described, and the fact that the general found time to send up and pay the Naval Brigade a much-appreciated compliment on their services is also noted. On the 8th the message 'We are retiring; do not fire except in reply,' was received. It was so, and on the next day our guns were brought down from Zwaart Kop, and the retirement completed.

"More fighting on the 12th, when Hussar Hill was seized, is chronicled. On this date the Terrible's 6in. gun arrived mounted, like the 4.7in. guns, on wheels. Gen. Buller rode out to Hussar Hill about 1 p.m., and said as he passed that he might want our 6in. gun. At 3 p.m. he ordered the forces to return, and our guns covered the movement. At 5.30 p.m. they were back, but only about 100 scattered Boers appeared, though they sniped very vigorously. On the 13th we heard that Hussar Hill was to be taken the next day. This was accomplished, and on the 15th and 16th there were slow advances, with trenching and shell fire.

"On the latter date we received the Queen's present of chocolate and it was intensely appreciated. Very great care was taken that the boxes should be safely registered for posting home, or to the ship. . . . Kimberley relieved. . . . Things look much brighter, and this time we are taking Colenso properly. We off-loaded the 6in. gun and brought it up by the 4.7's. On the 17th and 18th the guns were in action, and on the 19th we moved over to Gomba stream. The guns were drawn over fat boulders, over bushes and young trees, crashing along like elephants. After a halt of an hour we reached the Gomba Valley, and went on to the foot of Monte Christo. We were now nearer the 'Pom Pom,' shell, and rifle noises. At 4.30 p.m. we came into action in a very bad position. We silenced one of the Boer guns, but several others we failed to locate in the failing light. A better position was taken up on the 20th. At daylight on the 21st we saw two 'Pom Poms' going along the Ladysmith road and shelled them, but, of course, they were galloped away, and we had no chance of hitting them. At 5 p.m. we had orders to move. The only difficult bit was down over the Hlangwani ridge. However, we tackled it and got down first-rate, but I shall never forget the sight of those."

"Desultory firing took place on the 22nd and 23rd and the casualties were only one seriously and three slightly wounded, but one of our escort was killed and six wounded.

"Feb. 24.—Again under very hot shrapnel fire.

"Feb. 25.—No firing by mutual consent. Attending to wounded and burying the dead.

"Feb. 26.—The day was spent in 'going for' the Boer guns.

"Feb. 27.—All ready for a determined and well-planned advance. At 2.15 p.m. Pieters was ours. Boer reinforcements began to arrive from the Ladysmith direction, but our men held on to what they had taken in spite of a nasty all-round crossfire. Then began a tremendous bombardment of the trenches on the Railway Hill and the plateau adjoining. The naval people, with their powerful glasses, could follow every detail of the fight, and could be perfectly sure of what they were doing. Besides, we thoroughly knew the bit plan of attack. Here, in fact, we rather took the bit between our teeth and went our own way, confidently knowing the general's wishes. Messages came to us from staff officers saying that our fire was dangerous, and did we know what we were doing? We did, and we meant that until Tommy was right up and on top, the Boer riflemen should not have a chance. The closer we got the more lyddite we poured into them, till white flags began to wave in the Railway Hill trenches. Then we saw the final rush and the bayonet at work. The naval guns swept the hills in front, and at last Railway Hill was ours. Gen. Buller was pleased, and said that perhaps it would never quite be known how much the success of the assault was due to the naval gun fire. The success of the assault was due to the naval gun fire. The success of the assault was due to the naval gun fire.

"Sunday, March 3.—The Terribles were the accomplished relief of But the blow was softened by the accomplished relief of Ladysmith, and by the receipt of congratulatory telegrams from the Queen and the Admiralty. The Terrible left on March 11. Gen. Buller most kindly saw us off, and in response to the cheers we gave him, said 'Good-bye, boys, and good-luck to you.' I really think he would have missed us, except that we left behind our guns, Capt. Jones, of the Forte, and about 90 officers and men of the Forte, Philomel, and Tartar, who will, I am sure, keep up the traditions of the Service."

MILITARY OPERATIONS IN THE ORANGE RIVER COLONY.

FOR some days progress has been apparently slow in Lord Roberts's command, and the information received of current events in the theatre of war has been extremely meagre. What we are allowed by the military censors to know, however, is undoubtedly interesting, especially as regards operations in the Orange River Colony, where the various moves have now the character, and demand the care and deliberation, of those on a chess-board in the concluding situations of a closely contested game, with check-mate distinctly in view. Since the advance of Sir Redvers Buller from Natal the whole strategical field has, by force of circumstances, become divided into two areas, between which, from east to west, flow the waters of the Vaal. To the north of that river the hostile forces remain opposed to each other in a state of comparative inaction, spectators as it were of the operations in progress beyond the southern bank, where a few weeks should determine whether the British arms are to be crowned with final and decisive success in the Orange River Colony, or whether the foe will again escape, and, crossing to the north of the Vaal, enable Commandant General Botha to further delay the issue by a prolonged resistance in the mountains of the eastern districts of the Transvaal. The war having now assumed on the part of the enemy a guerilla character, the excitement caused by impending battles on a large scale, such as take place in regular warfare, will be wanting. But the country's interest in the issue is none the less real and profound, arising as it does from the longing that this war should now terminate, and leave us free for new emergencies that may arise and imperatively demand attention at any moment in another distant field, where many of our countrymen and women are in direr straits than ever faced the beleaguered garrisons in South Africa, and many, it is feared, have already suffered death under conditions that recall the terrible days of the Indian Mutiny.

The recent movements of British troops in the Transvaal have had reference more or less directly to Lord Roberts's general plan for bringing the contest to an end in the Orange River Colony. General Hunter, during his advance from Heidelberg across the Vaal to Frankfort, which place he occupied on Sunday, met with no opposition. On the 28th ult. an attack was made by a body of the enemy on Springs Station, the terminus of the branch line east from Johannesburg, and situated about twenty miles north of Heidelberg. The object of the attack was probably to stay General Hunter's advance south, and thus cause a diversion in favour of De Wet. If so, it failed in its object, being gallantly repulsed by the Canadian Regiment, which formed the garrison of the post. General Macdonald with the Highland Brigade, marching from Heilbron, reached Frankfort on Monday, and joined the command of Sir Archibald Hunter, whose column then comprised Macdonald's and Barton's brigades of infantry, with Ridley's mounted infantry and Broadwood's cavalry brigade. During this move southwards Sir Redvers Buller has continued his advance along the railway from Standerton. General Coke, with the 10th Brigade, made a reconnaissance on Saturday towards Amersfoort, where 2,000 Boers held a position fifteen miles from the railway, threatening Sir Redvers Buller's rear and line of communications. The position was shelled and the enemy retired, but they are in the neighbourhood and will doubtless be heard of again. General Clery's advance brigade of the 2nd Division occupied Greylingstad, on the railway thirty-five miles west of Standerton on Monday night without any more serious opposition than some sniping, and on Wednesday Generals Clery and Hart joined hands at Vlaktefontein, twelve miles from Greylingstad. By Sir Redvers Buller's flank march Lord Roberts has now obtained possession of all the important towns upon the railway from Johannesburg to Volksrust trains are running through from Natal to Greylingstad, and in a few days Durban will be accessible to him as a fresh and nearer base of supply. This cannot fail to bring relief to Pretoria where provisions and supplies are still scarce. On General Clery's arrival at Greylingstad, Viljeon's commando, which had held the place, retired towards Middleburg. Botha, with a force of about 7,000, largely composed of foreigners and colonial rebels, holds the country east and north of Pretoria, from Bronkhurst Spruit, covering Middleburg, to Pienaar on the Pietersburg line. This body and the commando posted near Amersfoort, flanking General Buller's line, together form the bulk of the Boer forces remaining to Mr. Kruger in the Transvaal.

South of the Vaal the general activity of the commandoes directed by Mr. Steyn and De Wet continues with unabated vigour. On the 23rd ult. a convoy for Lindley was heavily attacked, but the enemy were repulsed and the convoy reached the place in safety. On the 25th General Boyes' brigade of the 8th Division was in action near Ficksburg, repelling a fresh attempt of the Boers to break through to the south. Flying commandoes have been for some time infesting the Senekal-Winburg road. The days of grace given by Lord Roberts have expired, but there has been no indication of a general surrender. On the contrary, there has been increased aggressiveness. A commando posted on this road to intercept a convoy for Senekal under General Clements was attacked and severely defeated by General Brabant on the 26th. Colonel Grenfell's battalion of Brabant's Horse commenced the action by an attack on the enemy at Rietspruit, fifteen miles south-west of Senekal, while Brabant, hastening up with the rest of the Colonial Division from Senekal, fell upon the left of the Boers and drove them, after two hours' heavy fighting, along the road to Lindley, thus clearing the Winburg road. Lord Methuen on the 28th pursued a commando from their laager near Vecht-Kop, twelve miles south of Heilbron, towards Lindley, and recovered 8,000 sheep and 500 head of cattle looted by the enemy. On the same day General Clements was engaged with a large commando at a point ten miles north of Senekal on the Lindley road. The Boers at length gave way, but remained in the vicinity. It is satisfactory to know that throughout the various actions recorded victory has rested with the British. The work is, however, of the most arduous nature and the wear and tear in horses very great. The necessity for a second partial remounting of the mobile troops after the capture of Pretoria is sufficient to account for any seeming delay in Lord Roberts's movement against De Wet and Steyn. General Clements is reported since to have joined Paget at Lindley, thus strengthening the western cordon, and closing in on the area still occupied by the Boers, with a view to turn their southern positions, and drive them back on Bethlehem and Harrismith. Sir Leslie Rundle has made no change in his dispositions beyond moving his headquarters, on the 29th, from Senekal to Trommel, the more effectually to watch the most southerly line of posts from Winburg to Ficksburg. Although there is no definite information on the point, it is believed that Sir Redvers Buller has detached a column from Standerton to operate on Vrede. That alone is required to complete the enveloping movement and prevent the enemy's escape, assuming the passes in the Drakenberg to be effectually closed on the Natal side.

Although the information now received from the front is scanty and fragmentary, there is enough to indicate that the Boer position in the Orange River Colony is rapidly becoming desperate. When Vrede has been seized, which it will no doubt be very shortly, the commandoes of De Wet and Steyn will be enclosed by British forces at all points from that place in the north-east round by the west to Ficksburg in the south-east, where the rugged and impassable lines of Basutoland and the Drakenberg complete the circle of investment. The attempts, now of almost daily occurrence, to break through the southern and western cordons near Ficksburg, Lindley, and Senekal show the straits to which the Boers are reduced. Foiled in these attempts, as we trust they will continue to be, the enemy must gradually be forced inwards towards Bethlehem and Harrismith, within an area daily becoming more confined as the British columns converge upon its centre. It is possible, therefore, that some desperate resistance may still be offered to our advance, but the end ought to be the disappearance from the field, either by capture or surrender, of the southern Boer forces and the complete subjugation throughout its entire extent of the Orange River Colony. For some days no success has been scored by the intrepid De Wet, and communication both by rail and wire between the Cape and Pretoria has been restored. Notwithstanding the difficulty he experiences in preventing his burghers from surrendering, Mr. Steyn still maintains a defiant attitude, and further hard fighting, possibly in the neighbourhood of Reitz, whither he has moved, may be expected.

Pending the resumption of active operations in the Transvaal Lord Roberts is utilising the time at Pretoria in reorganising the administration, forming an efficient police force, taking stringent measures for the suppression of spies in the capital, and increasing the severity of the penalties incurred by the concealment of arms and by damage to the lines of communications. Markets have been established in Pretoria, where the utmost tranquillity prevails, although the population is, as yet, only sulkily submissive, and so long as occasional successes attend the operations of the fighting burghers this attitude may be expected to last, a fact pointing to the paramount necessity that exists for a thorough disarmament of the entire country both north and south of the Vaal, so that means shall not be at hand for revolt hereafter when the bulk of the troops shall have been withdrawn. Many thousands of Mauser rifles have, it is true, been given in or captured, but the total is still but a small fraction of the enormous number imported, while of the formidable guns the Boers have fought us with, scarcely any have fallen into our hands.

LESSONS OF THE WAR.

THE current number of the Journal of the Royal United Service Institution contains the full discussion on the interesting paper under the heading, "Lessons of the War," by Colonel Sir Howard Vincent. We recommend a perusal of this to our readers on account of the many expressions of opinions by qualified men that it contains. Unfortunately, there is too much opinion and too little reasoned out fact. What cause is there in our system of training which renders it impossible for our military experts to state the results of their investigations with some approach to the scientific accuracy usually looked for from, let us say, a railway bridge builder. Actually the two cases run far more nearly parallel than people know. The limits of variation are certainly greater in the former than in the latter case, but still within these limits the conclusions arrived at by the same chain of reasoning which engineers apply to cases of the nature indicated, are equally accurate and correct. For instance, in the paper with which we deal, there is considerable difference of opinion expressed as to the relative value of artillery and infantry fire. Obviously a broad comparison is impossible owing to the difference of range between the respective weapons, but, if we break up the question into an investigation of the relative power of the two arms at certain fixed ranges, we can obtain accurate solutions at each range and state a final conclusion in scientifically accurate language. Thus, we know for certain that if a bullet moving with a remaining velocity exceeding 400ft. a second encounter a man's head, the consequence to the man will usually be death.

Now take 1,500 yards as the given range. We know that a 15pr. quick-firing gun can deliver four rounds a minute with fair accuracy—each shrapnel shell contains 250 bullets, so each gun delivers 1,000 bullets a minute, which if the shells are burst, say fifty yards short of the target, will cover that target fairly uniformly with hits, at the rate of three bullets a minute to each square foot of surface, within a circle drawn with a 10ft. radius about the point the shell would have struck had it continued its flight undisturbed. Therefore, any living object a square foot in area—say, a man's head and shoulders—would receive a mortal wound every twenty seconds; which, incidentally it may be remarked, affords very little time for accurate aiming. Now, a company of infantry, with 100 rifles in action, and firing ten rounds a minute, will deliver an equal number of bullets; but under active service conditions with no approach to the same accuracy.

It is unnecessary to go into the extreme limits of variation of which individual fire is capable; it is sufficient to state that three hits per minute per square foot of target has never been attained at this rate of fire by any infantry in the world, and probably never will be. But 100 rifles to be used under the best conditions for ensuring accuracy require 100 yards of front, whereas the guns take normally only nineteen yards, and can be served with equal accuracy if necessary at five yards from centre to centre, that being the usual front allotted to them in the old fieldwork books. Again, there is no possibility of the gunner, however nervous he may be, communicating to the 14 cwt. of metal represented by the gun and its carriage any vertical or lateral movement, however slight; whereas the slightest quiver of hand or arm will displace the aim of the average rifleman. The error due to defective eyesight is constant to both, and therefore may be eliminated.

Hence the conclusion is obviously justified that at a range of 1,500 yards quick-firing guns firing shrapnel are of necessity far more effective than the fire of a company of infantry under like conditions. Similarly, we can analyse the question for any other range, and arrive at a working conclusion with regard to each. This is, in point of fact, precisely the way an engineer arrives at the dimensions and best materials for the purpose of executing his designs, and since even under the closest inspection uniformity of material is not to be absolutely relied on, he allows what is called a "factor of safety" in his estimates. We have taken only one simple instance, but it will be obvious that the same method is capable of wide application, and will only add that, proceeding on these lines, we predicted more than two years ago the limits of losses, i.e., highest and lowest, to be anticipated in warfare between civilised antagonists under conditions of equal armament as they exist at the present moment, and the experience we have recently undergone confirms these predictions quite as closely as ordinary business estimates for the construction of works are verified by their results.

A WARNING.

"THE day before Colonel Gordon left London for India," W. H. R. writes, "he called on me at the Carlton and asked me to come out and have a little farewell chat with him, as he could not smoke inside the club; and so we turned into the streetlet that divides the palaces of the Capulets and the Montagus, and between Lord Ripon's house and Pall Mall we walked up and down for a good hour. He had much to say about his novel engagement, and to explain the situation as he viewed it, in its relation to the outgoing Governor General and himself, but it is with reference to the present most dreadful agony of Christendom in China that I now recall Gordon's words of warning. We had been speaking of the Taeping Rebellion and of the 'ever victorious' Army, when, as I said a word about 'the cowardice' of the Chinese, Gordon stopped short, and said, 'No! no! they are not cowards in one sense. They do not fear death, and I have seen Chinamen stand up bravely sometimes and fly like sheep afterwards. But what Europeans have to consider is the awful consequences of a general movement, when we least expect it, in the vast inert mass of hundreds of millions of men to overwhelm the "foreign-devils" whom they hate like poison; and the danger of such an outburst becomes greater every year, for the Chinese are continually harassed by the European States with demands for compensations, in some cases very just, in others quite frivolous; and, as they see that their only means of meeting the aggressions is to organise an army with improved weapons, you may depend on it that they will buy guns and rifles and ships, and with the aid of Europeans, who will always be found ready to drill and organise them, that some fine day you will have to face a formidable army. Of one thing be quite sure. The days when you could march up to Chinese troops in position, or in defence of a position, and sweep them away like flies will soon be over. No more military promenades by a few hundred British and French troops through the country driving thousands of Chinese before them. Never trust a mandarin, great or small. I was only too glad when I left their service. We English make the mistake of believing that we are welcome wherever we go. I am quite sure that in fifteen or twenty years we must be prepared for proof to the contrary. With all their hideous superstitions, their vices, and their ignorance, the Chinese are far too good for their nobles—or whatever you like to call the rulers of the people. The Governments of France, Russia, and England have treated them most scandalously for the last forty years.'"

Army Notes.

The statements made by Mr. Burdett-Coutts of what he saw in some of the hospitals at Bloemfontein are to be subjected to strict investigation, and it is only right to refrain from the expression of any opinion on the matters in controversy till the report of the Commission which the Government has been obliged to nominate is before the public. It may be observed, however, in reference to some of the quasi contradictions which have been forwarded to the Press by various persons, that they do not traverse Mr. Burdett-Coutts's evidence by direct denial, but insist on the absence of the evils he described when they were at these or other hospitals. He is like the man who was accused of stealing a pig, and was told that the prosecutor could produce a witness who saw him abduct the animal, to which he naturally replied, "And I can bring a dozen who will swear they never saw me do it." Mr. Burdett-Coutts declares that he witnessed dreadful instances of preventible suffering and cruel neglect at Bloemfontein at a certain date. He says they were preventible. His opponents say they did not see anything of the kind when they were at Bloemfontein or other places, and some of them say further that if there were such cases, that they were inevitable owing to the operations in the field. If the latter contention be sustained there is no more to be said. "A la guerre comme à la guerre." Napoleon lost tens of thousands of men in the snows of Russia. The stricken avoided their fate. After our wars there have been generally a good many controversies—and unfrequently Courts of Inquiry, and Commissions, and the like. In October, 1855, Lord Limerston declared that the hospitals at Sebastopol were in the most admirable condition, that the troops enjoyed every comfort compatible with a campaign; but that was after the fall of the place—and in the previous June the Court of Inquiry reported that "the sufferings of the Army resulted from the circumstances under which the expedition had been undertaken, and that the Government which ordered it had adequate information as to the amount of the losses in the Crimea." History repeats itself, indeed. The reports of the correspondent of the Times had already turned out the Government of the day.

The House of Commons was undoubtedly right, Thursday night, in pressing for the inclusion of two additional members on the Commission, which, on Lord Roberts's suggestion, the Government have appointed to inquire into the hospital and nursing arrangements in South Africa. We see no exception to the names which the Government submitted as those best qualified to serve such a Commission; they are all men of the highest possible professional reputation. Dr. Church, the President of the College of Physicians, and Dr. Daniel Cunningham, Professor of Anatomy and Surgery in Trinity College, Dublin, both command the respect and confidence of their profession, whilst Lord Justice Romer is, as Mr. Balfour said, "a man with all the business qualifications, all the impartiality, and all the power of collecting and sifting evidence desirable in one who is to preside over a Commission of this kind." But we agree with Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman and others, who spoke in the debate, that the medical element should not predominate on the Commission. It was very truly said that the questions to be investigated are not those of medical technicalities alone. In these circumstances it is eminently desirable that the representation of what may be called ordinary lay opinion should be strengthened. What is wanted above all things is, as the Leader of the Opposition said, a business man accustomed to bring his common sense and experience of life to bear on the great problems and difficulties which present themselves in South Africa. If a man can be found who has had railway experience, and possesses knowledge of what is and is not possible in connection with traffic over crowded lines so much the better. We do not think it is very much to the purpose to draw an analogy between what should be done now and what was done when attention was drawn to the state of things prevailing in the Crimea; Mr. Burdett-Coutts laboured to show that the circumstances were similar, but we are glad to think with Sir James Fergusson that the conditions then and now scarcely admit of comparison, though the member for Westminster made a clever Parliamentary point when he alluded to the fact that when the letters of Sir William Howard Russell, the Times correspondent of those days, awoke the country to the state of things prevailing in the Crimea, the medical authority who had been on the spot, Sir George Brown, was saying in this country that everything was perfectly right. But, though things are not so bad in South Africa as in the Crimea, it is very evident that a strong case has been made out for inquiry. Sir James Fergusson, the Chairman of the Service Members' Committee, expressed his opinion, in the course of Thursday's debate, that proper use had not been made of the means placed at the disposal of the authorities in South Africa by the Government at home. This is the view which we ourselves expressed last week, and we are glad to find that the Service members in the House are coming round to that way of thinking. Sir James Fergusson said he had seen letters, the truth of which he could not doubt, showing a most unfortunate state of things to be existing, down to the despatch of the last mail, even in hospitals in the neighbourhood of Cape Town. These letters launched a heavy indictment against the Army Medical Department, and in justice to that Department it is desirable that an inquiry should be held. There is reason to fear that the equipment and organisation of the Department has left a good deal to be desired. But it would be well perhaps to reserve judgment on this and other matters till the inquiry has been held, though it is common knowledge in Service circles that the Army Medical Service have been treated in the past in a spirit which is not conducive to its efficiency. It is in the hope that all this will be changed in the future that we cordially welcome the inquiry that is to be held, and we are glad, too, that by the addition of two members to the Commission, making it a body of five instead of three, there will be a better prospect of the question of transport, and other matters wrapped up in the hospital arrangements, securing proper attention.

Lord Wemyss in the House of Lords on Monday moved the second reading of the Militia Ballot Bill, which was really a replica of that brought in last session by the Secretary of State for War. Lord Wemyss made an enthusiastic appeal on behalf of the founding picked up by him, as he put it, "on the steps of the War Office." The Militia ballot, he argued, was absolutely suited alike to our insular and Imperial needs, and he proceeded to throw scorn on these days of "emergency measures, an emergency Army, emergency expenditure, and emergency camps." Two members who followed expressed divergent views. Earl Cowper contended that the "magnificent exhibition of the facility with which volunteers could be obtained proved the lack of any necessity for compulsion," while Lord Newton expressed "amazement" that peers should be "driven down to the House" to oppose a Bill which the Government themselves brought in last year. In the end the House rejected the Bill by a majority of 59, on the understanding that the War Office is about to take steps to improve the general condition of the Militia. Lord Lansdowne claimed that Lord Wemyss was inconsistent. It is somewhat difficult to follow the War Minister's reasoning, but we must not be too critical, having regard to the assurance which has been given by the head of the War Office that to bring in last year's Bill at the present moment would be to interfere seriously with the programme of military reforms which it is hoped to carry into effect. As no outsider can possibly know what the intentions of the Government are, the tone adopted by certain leading organs in the press during the last few days can only result in mischief. To demand, for instance, as some of them have done, that the public should be informed at once through the Secretary of State for War what course the Government proposes to pursue is absurd, to say the least, seeing that on the broad question of Army reorganisation no plans can possibly have been laid down.

So far as the Militia is concerned Lord Lansdowne explained on Monday, and his explanation must be accepted in good faith, that the result of last year's experiment in bringing in a Bill in order to keep the Militia ballot in reserve in case it might be wanted showed the Government that the measure, if enforced, would be too near to the "conscription line" to be popular. This is absolutely true, as the extracts before us of the remarks of the most influential journals at the time prove conclusively. There is no denying that the country was not in a humour last year to accept anything in the form of compulsory service, and we are disposed to think that it is even less prepared now, after the experiences of the campaign in South Africa. This being the case it is no use saying that the Government has stultified itself. We are not at all in accord with the Government in many matters. We hold that recent utterances of Lord Salisbury, Mr. Arthur Balfour, and Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, are most lowering to us as a nation. But we know the enormous difficulties which Lord Lansdowne has to overcome, and we are therefore less disposed to blame him for what is wrong in our military system. That he is moving in the right direction, slowly but surely, is a fact which every soldier must recognise. For many years past, ever since the introduction of what goes by the name of territorialism, the Militia has been little better than a most extravagant recruiting system. Lord Lansdowne has become convinced of the very serious error which has been committed by succeeding war ministers, in allowing such a condition of things to go on unremedied, and he has determined to do what is in his power to remove on the earliest possible date some of the disadvantages under which the Militia labours. And his lordship indicated on Tuesday, in replying to Lord Wemyss, the direction which the reforms he has in contemplation are to take.

Henceforth, a Militiaman is not to be called upon to wear ill-fitting, half-worn clothing. The Militia recruit is to have a better and moresoldier-like training. At present his military education is too hurried to give him a chance of becoming a good and useful soldier. This is to be remedied. A scheme is being elaborated by which Militia officers are to obtain much more frequent opportunities of improving their professional knowledge, and this under conditions which will prevent their being put to expense. Under this head officers will be attached to the headquarters of Regimental Districts for more or less lengthened periods to watch over the training of their men. A scheme has at the same time been put before the Government "under which the whole of the Militia may be allowed to accept a larger liability for service abroad, and in consideration of their assuming that liability, the bounty will be largely increased, with the further condition that the Militia Reserve will be put an end to altogether, the whole force accepting the same liability as that which the Militia Reserve now serve under." In other words, "it is possible," to quote Lord Lansdowne again, "that the conditions of service for the whole force may be changed, and that the removal of some of the grievances of which we have heard so much will have the result of again filling the ranks of the Militia." All friends of the Militia will receive the Ministerial assurance with favour. The steps about to be taken to improve the efficiency of the force have been urgently needed. If the war in South Africa has done nothing else it has called attention to the value and shortcomings of the Militia. Thus, one benefit at least has resulted from it, upon which all classes of the community are to be congratulated.

It is to be regretted, of course, that Lord Wemyss should have decided to resign his commission as Honorary Colonel of the London Scottish Volunteers, for his name has been an honoured one on account of the good service he rendered to the nation forty years ago. The reasons, however, which his lordship assigns for the course he has adopted in the letter addressed to Lord Lansdowne, which has unfortunately been published in the Press, cannot fail to rob him of much sympathy. With regard to Lord Wemyss's first point, the fact is indisputable that the nation is not prepared for any form of compulsory service. We wish we could think otherwise, but we are bound to accept the position as it is. So far as Lord Wemyss' second complaint is concerned, we are entirely in accord with his views. There is one word which will fairly express the treatment to which the Militia has been subjected under the territorial system; it has been monstrous. But Lord Lansdowne has pledged himself to put the matter right, and it is only fair that time should be allowed him to mature his plans. So far as the Volunteers are concerned, Lord Wemyss would seem to forget that the citizen soldier of to-day refuses to be "a man with a musket" only. All ranks alike demand to be regarded seriously, and in this are supported by enlightened military opinion. Only last week Lord Wolseley, presiding over a gathering of Volunteers, was cheered vociferously when he said: "The sending of Volunteers abroad was a very important step, and he hoped it would be followed in all future wars, either great or small. Such was the military spirit of the country that whatever the Queen asked she would find willing and good soldiers to carry out her orders, and among these the Volunteers had now to be included." In all the circumstances we trust it may not be too late for Lord Wemyss to reconsider his decision, for his action otherwise will be very much of the nature of that of the spoilt schoolboy, who, failing to direct the order of a game, puts on his coat and declares that if he cannot have all his own way he will not play. It used to be said of the Volunteer of past times that his patriotism was all very well but there was no discipline behind it. Lord Wemyss has gone out of his way to show that this charge was not unfounded.

It is to be hoped that the offers of assistance made by the Colonies will be accepted. Australasia has a vital interest in the future of China, and she is nearer the scene of action than any other part of the Empire, India only excepted. The Premier of New South Wales says that between 2,000 and 3,000 men can be dispatched immediately, besides gunboats and cruisers. If the troops he offers are mounted, there should be no hesitation in accepting them, as the regiments ordered to the front from India are nearly all infantry, and the Chinese are easily thrown into confusion by cavalry, of which they are afraid. Moreover, the Boer War has taught us by disaster that the strength of an army must consist of mounted infantry, and this arm Australasia can provide in numbers and quality as no other part of the Empire can. Lord Brassey, who has only just vacated the Governorship of Victoria, in an interview published in the Daily News, proposes that Australasia should organise an auxiliary force ready for just such an Imperial emergency as that in China at the present moment. It should consist of not less than 5,000 men, and be subsidised by the Imperial Treasury at the rate of £20 a man. This would mean an annual cost of £100,000 a year, though why the Home Exchequer should pay for it is not quite clear. Australia's interest in the maintenance of the Empire is great enough to enable her to bear corresponding burdens, and these will naturally take the form of a strong auxiliary force of mounted infantry, which will be "under an engagement to serve anywhere." Lord Brassey under-estimates the strength of Colonial Imperialism if he supposes that Australians will allow the Imperial Treasury to pay for a Colonial Reserve, except when it is serving beyond the bounds of the continent, as in Rhodesia at the present time. There is not the slightest doubt, that though the Australian bush riders have "not had the training of men in cavalry regiments, they are already well prepared for service in the field." With careful and regular drill they would prove a source of military strength to the Empire as well as to Australia herself. But it cannot be admitted that the Bushmen are "first-rate" shots. They can be made so, but that is not yet.

We hold rather strong views as to the part that the Universities have played of recent years—or, to be more correct, we ought to say, perhaps, the part they have failed to play—in respect to national defence. Our ideas on the subject are too well known to require to be stated here. We are glad, therefore, to find that Dr. Warre, the headmaster of Eton, is with us entirely. But Dr. Warre goes one farther than even we have, for he is not satisfied that the public schools are as sensible as they should be of the duty imposed upon them. It is his belief, as it is ours, that the salvation of the country as regards national defence depends on the right and timely training of its youth. He proposes, therefore, that all persons in statu pupillari at the Universities and public secondary schools should be enrolled for the purpose of instruction in drill, manoeuvre, and the use of arms. We quite agree with Dr. Warre that much depends on the training of the youth of the country, in developing the mind and forming the character. When that is done the boy is properly fitted to begin the study of the profession for which he is destined. Dr. Warre would combine the ordinary education of all boys at secondary schools with a military education, so that the efficiency of the officers of the Army and the Auxiliary Forces might be raised, and the knowledge of, and interest in, military matters be increased generally throughout the kingdom. Any movement in this direction cannot fail to do good. It is a disgrace to us as a people that so many young men of position not only hold aloof from military service, but ridicule the efforts of those who do bear arms in the Militia, Yeomanry, and Volunteers. So long as this state of things exists, the heads of our Universities and public schools are wanting in proper appreciation of their duty to the nation if they remain inactive, for they must recognise the immense benefit it is to young men from whatever class they are drawn to be brought under the influence of military discipline in some way or other once they are launched on the world to fight the battle of life. Dr. Warre has taken a broad and practical view, and we venture to think that much good will ultimately result from his sound teaching in regard to a question of the very highest importance to the British Empire.

A meeting was held at the Royal United Service Institution on Tuesday last, under the presidency of Lord Blythswood, for the purpose of forming an "Army League and Imperial Defence Association." The aim of the organisation, as explained by the chairman, is "to educate public opinion and to show the man in the street the present condition of the Army and the developments required." It is the desire of the promoters of the league to assist all governments, irrespective of party, but to urge them nevertheless to make the Army adequate to the needs of the Empire. An organisation with principles like these as the basis of its operations cannot fail to do good, provided always there is no taint of politics in its proceedings. We quite agree with Major-General Stirling, who seconded a resolution that "the extension of the Empire demands very different precautions for defence to those which have hitherto been considered sufficient." We want a readier system and a real Reserve, not men with muskets such as some members of the Government would, perhaps, be satisfied with, if Lord Salisbury's recent proposal of Primrose League rifle clubs is to be taken seriously. We should have preferred to think that the "Army League and Imperial Defence Association" was quite unnecessary; but, having regard to the public utterances of Lord Salisbury, Mr. Arthur Balfour, and Sir Michael Hicks-Beach on recent occasions, an organisation of the kind would appear to be much required to prevent the most important of all questions with which Governments have to deal sinking to the level of ordinary domestic legislation, much of which the country would be better without.

Mr. Wyndham, in the House of Commons on Tuesday, was called upon to answer a series of questions dealing with the subject of the forthcoming examination of Militia subalterns for commissions in the Army—one, of course, in which a number of young men, to say nothing of parents and others, are deeply interested. There is no disguising that the War Office is placed in a position of extreme difficulty in respect to this examination. It recognises the importance of having some sort of test of the fitness of candidates. At the same time it would be unfair to make that test too severe, seeing that many of the candidates are actually serving with units in the field, and are necessarily prevented from undergoing any systematic course of preparation. A happy medium course has been adopted which ought to satisfy everybody, as care is to be taken that the examination shall be made as easy as possible for officers at the front, whilst a proportion of vacancies will be set apart for those who may be nominated by Lord Roberts on the recommendation of their commanding officers. In other cases marks will be given for every day of duty done on active or foreign service, and every day on board ship, the examination of candidates in South Africa and on foreign stations taking place as far as possible on the spot. It would be impossible, of course, to please everybody, and even these arrangements will be objected to by some, but on the whole they strike us as being essentially fair.

A correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette calls attention to a subject which has already been commented upon in our columns, viz., the extraordinary treatment of the newly-raised Reserve Regiments. Our remarks have referred more particularly to the infantry units, the men of which were left for weeks as barrack-loafers, with £12 apiece in their pockets—to go, of course, into the canteen tills. But Her Majesty's Regiments of Reserve Cavalry have been more unfortunate, in some respects, than the infantry battalions. The Pall Mall Gazette correspondent tells of the trials of all ranks of the Reserve Regiment of Lancers stationed at Ballincollig, under that capable commanding officer, Colonel the Hon. H. Legge, who commanded the 9th Lancers 1887-90. The War Office fixed the strength at 647. Of this number the old soldiers only supplied 147, and the remaining 500 were recruits sent from reserve squadrons of Lancer regiments in South Africa. These men were sent at the end of April this year to the headquarters of the regiment at Ballincollig. When they arrived they found there were no stores, no clothing, no arms, no saddlery. There were not enough beds to go round, and not even socks or shirts could be obtained by the men who had "chucked their jobs." Up to a fortnight ago the men were in plain clothes. Large numbers of horses arrived by May 1, but there were no tools to shoe them with, and nothing except the halters of the dealers to tie them up with. One reason of the chaos prevailing was that no quartermaster had been appointed. The colonel, having failed in his application for a quartermaster, applied for a "promote," that is, a quartermaster-sergeant from a cavalry regiment at home to be promoted quartermaster. The reply of Pall Mall was that when the regiment was disbanded they would not know what to do with the quartermaster! The effect of all this is that for more than two months these men have had nothing to do. While the recruits were with their own reserve squadrons they were being made efficient in the riding-school and by foot-drill. Besides being idle at Ballincollig, they were thrown into the society of men, some of whom, it is to be feared, employed their ample leisure in spending their extra grants in ways that were open to some objection. The correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette says truly:—

"In other directions the War Office is strangely remiss. Take the case of a ridingmaster on retired pay ordered to join one of these newly-formed regiments. Being a man who has risen from the ranks, he is naturally without private means. He breaks up a home in the south of England, and proceeds to the south of Ireland at considerable cost to himself. When he rejoins his regiment he applies to the regimental agents for his pay, and is informed that he cannot receive it until he has been gazetted. It is six weeks before he is gazetted, and in the meantime it may readily be supposed that he is financially very much put about, seeing that his retired pay is always drawn, as it were, in arrears."

It is difficult to make any excuse for such crass stupidity as this. Some may have thought that we exaggerated the full extent of the infantry absurdity. But the case of the cavalry is unpardonable. When it is considered that every non-commissioned officer and man receives a gratuity of £22 for his year's work, it will be seen what a reckless extravagance there must have been.

The position of affairs in Ashanti would seem to be improving. At any rate, the telegrams from Colonel Willcocks read in both Houses of Parliament on Thursday give cause for hope that Kumasi may be saved, though there is no distinguishing that the situation even yet is somewhat critical. Sir Frederick Hodgson was able with 600 native soldiers, under command of Major A. H. Morris, D.S.O., Royal Irish Regiment, to leave Kumasi on June 23 by way of Patiosa and Terrebun, Captain F. E. Bishop, 3rd Batn. Bedfordshire Regiment, and 100 men remaining behind with rations enough to keep them going up to the 15th inst., by which date Colonel Willcocks has given an assurance that he personally will relieve the post if it is possible to do so. Meanwhile, Lieut.-Colonel Burroughs, with 400 men of the West African Regiment, has struck a distinct blow at the enemy, for which he deserves the utmost credit. He arrived at Domponsi on Sunday last, and took the enemy so completely by surprise that he forced them to evacuate their stockades, captured "forty guns and caps," and left thirty dead on the field, his own loss being only one killed and three wounded. We can only hope that Colonels Willcocks and Burroughs' efforts may be crowned with success. If they are they will be men to be honoured, for they are relying wholly on black troops, and have to face difficulties which only those who know the country in which they are operating can fully appreciate. Whether they succeed or not, their pluck is worthy of the best traditions of the British Army. Colonel Burroughs' success is specially commendable, as it was only a few weeks ago that he assumed command of the West African Regiment, having been brought back from retirement to accept a weight of responsibility by reason of the high character he bore as a regimental officer, though he has never had an opportunity hitherto of distinguishing himself in the field.

Interest in the war in South Africa seems to be falling off in the minds of continental military critics, who devote less space to discussing the events now that success attends our arms. Reviewing their comments, it cannot be said that they have succeeded in adding much to our knowledge. The war has no doubt taught us a great deal, but its teachings, so far as they are disclosed, are pretty clear, and no critic either at home or abroad yet possesses adequate information concerning the inner details. Much bitterness has existed among our foreign contemporaries, and they have never lost an opportunity of depreciating our successes, and the quality of our officers and men, or of extolling the Boers. It is true that the German critics perceived a lamentable lack of initiative on the part of our enemy, and that from the very beginning they have forecast that men who always stood upon the defensive could not finally prevail. But, at the same time, most of them have cherished the hope that the burghers would yet assume the offensive in a practical fashion, and not in the way of mere raids. In France, the Revue du Cercle Militaire has proved itself a dispassionate critic, but it does not disguise its admiration for the "heroic struggle maintained by a people possessing small means against one of the greatest nations of Europe possessing the most extensive resources." None of our contemporaries seem to have taken any account of the great difficulties that attend campaigning in South Africa, the vast distances to be covered, the long lines of communication, and the huge difficulty of the matter of supplies. Here, at least, they must admit that we have attained a success which has perhaps never been rivalled in the history of war.

We are asked by the editor of the Nineteenth Century to draw attention to a proposal which he is making for the establishment of a vigilance committee or association, having for its object to fix public attention upon some of the most important lessons of the South African War:—

"Foremost among such lessons are:—(1) the necessity for examining the condition of the defences of the Empire and their administration by the public offices charged therewith; and (2) the need for conducting the business of the country, as administered by all the various departments of State, upon ordinary business principles and methods."

The movement has found support in Lord Rosebery, the Earl of Olanwilliam, the Bishop of London, Cardinal Vaughan, Bishop Brindle, D.S.O., Sir Howard Vincent, Sir Andrew Clarke, and a large number of other well-known public men. The idea is no doubt excellent, being to educate public opinion, and those who are directing the movement will doubtless keep clear of the error of inducing anything more than a healthy current of opinion upon vital matters. An outside body which interferes in the details of public administration, or that permits a knot of faddists to use its influence to promulgate their views, may be the reverse of an advantage. But nothing but good can come of the proposal made in the Nineteenth Century, as we understand its scope and purpose.

In the same magazine Colonel Lonsdale Hale has a capital article on "The Home Generals and their Work in the Coming Autumn." The memoranda issued from Pall Mall entirely please him, since they show conclusively that the purpose is thoroughly practical, and that the ceremonial and bright button business is to be relegated to the background. It remains for the general officers commanding districts and the generals and brigadiers in the field to gather the fruit of the new movement:—

"And now, without a word of warning or of time for preparation for their work, these officers are called on to arrange and conduct a system of training under which are to be forced up during a very limited period of time to the standard of efficiency almost unknown to the generals of their younger days, that of real efficiency for real war in the field, a great number of officers and men who are sublimely innocent of military knowledge."

The home generals have to deal with a subject new to them from its practical side—the leading and working of troops of all arms in combination in cultivated England, and they have to prepare their troops for the work and to enter upon a system probably necessitating a complete break with the Aldershot system in vogue in past years. They must lead the way, says Colonel Lonsdale Hale, and their enthusiasm and zeal will be infectious in the lower ranks. In ordinary times illustration of how not to do it might be permissible, but now we cannot afford to accept bad results from the training, and Colonel Lonsdale Hale rightly urges that every general should beat up for teachers among the officers under his command. If the troops go not properly directed to their work, time will be lost and money squandered, and it is right to say that, in view of the training of 1900, "ground" overshadows everything else.

"Grey Lancers" has written a most sensible letter on the subject of the "Soldier as a Trespasser." As he says, "Several times in the present war neglect of ordinary precautions, or say, rather, scouting badly carried out, has brought serious loss in men and material on British forces. At once the regimental officer is made the scapegoat, dubbed stupid and careless, his shortcomings paraded for inspection in the Press." But does the fault really rest at the door of the British officer or trooper? Certainly not. The public does realise, for the public does care as a rule to think, how much local conditions in the United Kingdom have to do with the matter. "Grey Lancer" quotes an instance in which the law of trespass upset the whole of his plans for the instruction of his men: "The other day, while carrying out a small reconnaissance scheme with my squadron, I received a message from my subaltern to the effect that he was unable to occupy a certain hill, as the farmer objected to his going up. The failure to effect this spoilt the scheme and prevented my different patrols keeping touch." Now, thoughtful men must recognise how much officers of all ranks are hampered whilst thus prevented from imparting practical instruction. It is all well and good to say, as some do, "Oh, cavalry officers think far too much of polo and hunting." It is best, perhaps, that they should be good sportsmen; for it takes their minds off their disappointments, of which their inability to train their men on anything like sound lines is by no means the least. Perhaps when the war is over the subject of scouting may arise; and, if it does, it would be wise for the Government in this connection to go also into the law of trespass, which has had not a little to do, as every general officer of experience knows, with our reverses in South Africa.

In the announcement in the Gazette of the circumstances under which the Victoria Cross has been bestowed on an officer, a sergeant, a gunner and a driver of Q Battery, R.H.A., for the gallant rescue by hand of the five guns saved out of the two batteries engaged in the action at Korn Spruit on March 31, it is stated that the few remaining gunners were assisted by a party of officers and men of "mounted infantry." It does not seem to be generally known that the 2nd Durham Light Infantry company of the Burma Mounted Infantry are the "mounted infantry" referred to as volunteering to assist in dragging the guns saved out of action. Lieutenants Ainsworth, May, and Ashburner of that regiment (with Lieut. Grover, 2nd Shropshire Light Infantry, attached) being the officers. The latter was severely wounded and died half an hour afterwards, whilst Lance - Corporal Edgar, Privates Pickford and Horton, of the men of the Durhams who volunteered to assist, were also wounded. Thus the gallant Durhams would appear to have maintained in action the high character they earned for themselves on the polo ground in India, a fact scarcely to be wondered at, considering the splendid character they have borne throughout their foreign tour. But are the Durhams to go unrewarded?

It is unlikely that the strict letter of the law will be enforced in the case of Majors coming under the forty-eight years' rule. And there is much to be said, certainly, in favour of an occasional relaxation of existing regulations; having regard to the fact that so many regiments have one if not two battalions in the field. The present is no time for disposing of the service of tried soldiers. We want all the senior officers we have, and may want them badly if the "Chinese difficulty" is not soon removed. The Majors coming within the terms of the Royal Warrant during the next six months are:—H. A. S. Barkworth, 1st Batn. Border Regiment, on August 9; W. MacLaughlin, 1st Batn. Shropshire Light Infantry, on August 11; F. J. Eveleigh, 1st Batn. Oxfordshire Light Infantry, on September 27; T. P. Lowry, West India Regiment, on October 7; R. Eccles, 2nd Batn. Oxfordshire Light Infantry, on November 15; W. H. M. Bent, 2nd Batn. South Staffordshire Regiment, on November 30; J. Mitchell-Innes, 2nd Batn. Highland Light Infantry, on December 4. It will be seen that many of these officers are on active service. That in itself ought to be a recommendation for them. In cases where they are not the ordinary course of procedure will doubtless be followed. Forty-eight is, after all, rather an early age to pension off a tried officer who is physically fit for the duties of his profession. It is, perhaps, necessary and desirable to have a limit of service in periods of profound peace, but in war time there is little to be gained by running promotion on red-tape principles; indeed the following up of such a policy would be ridiculous, for it would be robbing the Army of the very men it most requires just at the moment when it stands most urgently in need of them.

The South African War has shown that the chief essentials of an army to-day are (1) mobility, (2) marksmanship, and (3) cover, both natural and artificial. The first of these demands the employment of mounted riflemen on a large and properly organized scale. The value of mounted infantry has for years been recognised by our military authorities, and at certain camps the training of detachments from battalions has been carried out, an establishment of horses being maintained at such military centres for the purpose. This is a step in the right direction, but is a step only, and falls short of actual present requirement. What is wanted is that a far larger proportion of our infantry soldiers should be trained to act, if required, as mounted riflemen. It should not be made compulsory, as some men are physically incapable of becoming serviceable horsemen, and recruiting might seriously be affected by compelling every foot-soldier to learn to ride and groom a horse. But, on the completion of the dismounted drills, all infantry soldiers might be invited to volunteer for mounted training if required. The main difficulty would be the supply of sufficient horses of a suitable stamp. To maintain mounted establishments at all garrisons would be a costly business, and if an economical method could be found for meeting the service it should be adopted. Evidently the only alternative would be to encourage farmers, country gentlemen, and others to breed and maintain, for army service, suitable cobs of about fourteen hands, for which in peace time the War Department should pay an annual retaining fee, and in time of war should purchase, if required, at a certain price, a maximum limit being fixed. Each cob should be ready with serviceable bridle and saddle of suitable patterns whenever required during the months in the year when drills are being carried on. A small roughriding staff with a farrier sergeant would be required at each riding centre, for instruction in riding, saddling, grooming, and the care of horses. The recruit when trained should receive a small increase of pay, with badge, which would both encourage others to volunteer for mounted training, and would be an acknowledgment of the man's increased military efficiency. The proportion of mounted infantry battalions to be regularly maintained as part of the establishment of the Army is a matter demanding further consideration. The general question of the provision of Army horses is now receiving from the Press the attention it deserves; and this is but a branch of it, and a very important one, because it is not alone essential to have the men for equipping at short notice a large force of mounted riflemen, but also to have a sufficient number of the proper stamp of small, handy horses whereon to mount them. The breeding of Army horses in this country and in Ireland has been much hindered hitherto, owing to the insufficient prices paid by the War Department in the face of the risks attending the rearing of the animals in their early years. The consequences are that fewer horses are bred than should be the case, and that of those that become useful remounts the most promising are purchased at enhanced prices by foreign agents.

The release of some hundred and twenty regimental officers, prisoners of war at Pretoria, must have come, for more reasons than one, as a godsend to the War Office. All these officers have been seconded in their regiments, and their places have had to be filled by new appointments. As it is they will gradually be restored. Four of them are actually commanding officers of units.

The War Office is suffering from a plethora of suggested reforms. Some of them are being relentlessly driven into unwilling ears. The Auxiliary Forces are very properly coming in for a large share of attention. The position of the Volunteer Force is, we believe, now under consideration. Its strength and weakness has, by the present national emergency, been laid bare, and the psychological moment for amendment, if not reconstruction, has arrived. First and foremost it is held by those who have a right to speak as representatives of the Service that Volunteer officers should be compulsorily trained in the higher branches of the profession. This can only be done by the establishment of night schools at provincial centres. Some are inclined to advocate an addition to the number of instructors to the extent of one per company. This is both unnecessary and undesirable. It is of the first importance that the officers should be brought into touch with the rank and file. This is a sine qua non of good feeling, and consequently of efficiency. There should be no restriction on the number of men sent to camp, whether it is a brigade or battalion camp. Commanding officers should be encouraged to bring every efficient Volunteer into the summer camps. Volunteer officers now, we are glad to find, agree with the view we have always taken in regard to the brigade system which stands condemned. For one week in the year battalions are under the brigadier, and for the remaining fifty-one under the officer commanding the regimental district. They should serve one master only. What is the object of having a brigadier if he is not to command? The Secretary of State has recognised that a Volunteer expert officer should be consulted by the War Office as to matters relating to the Volunteer Service, but as this expert is one whose knowledge of the Force is confined to the Metropolitan only, we fail to see what benefit will accrue to the service at large. The new arrangement is likely to result rather in evil than in good. One would have thought that the Major-General commanding the Home District, the senior officers of the Brigade of Guards, and any number of competent adjutants, would have been able to have given advice on questions affecting the Metropolitan corps. The War Office, however, has once again gone out of its way to do the wrong thing. What a pity it is that the department in such matters cannot be induced to display ordinary business qualities!

The steps which are being taken to increase the establishments of Volunteer battalions in London and the provinces are open to objection. The desire of commanding officers to add to the strength of their regiments is at first sight praiseworthy; but the matter cuts two ways. The effect of the war has been to produce a martial feeling among all classes of the community, and no doubt thousands of young men are now desirous of bearing arms who would not have thought of doing so in more peaceful times. It is doubtful, however, whether the military spirit will continue when active operations are at an end. Already difficulty is experienced in some districts in finding candidates to fill vacancies in the commissioned ranks. Any considerable augmentation of establishments would, there is reason to fear, tend to make the want of officers more felt; and even so far as the rank and file are concerned, it is not possible to secure large musters for annual encampments, which alone can provide proper training for officers and men. Armed men on paper are not of much military value; but a large augmentation of our Volunteer strength would mean more individuals in this category. It would be far better, we are disposed to think, to submit the Volunteers to a process of weeding than to take on thousands of new men, and so add greatly to the work of the staff, without any prospect of better general results. If there are so many applicants for enrolment, why not put pressure on the shirkers to move on and give place to those more enthusiastic than themselves? Numbers are illusory. What the nation wants is men trained to arms. An extensive augmentation of the Volunteers will only tend to lower the general standard. We should much prefer to see the principle of the waiting list introduced. That would act as an incentive to those serving to do their duty loyally. By that means the hands of commanding officers would be considerably strengthened, for the shirkers could then be summarily dealt with, and would be less willing to submit to the pains and penalties of indolence. It would be time enough to talk of raising fresh companies when those that exist were brought up to the standard of efficiency laid down by regulation. What the Government requires to do first of all, so far as the Auxiliary Forces are concerned, is to bring the Militia up to its full establishment, and render that Service popular. We are not among those who consider that anything is to be gained by encouraging jealousies between the forces of the Crown;

indeed, we deprecate most strongly all attempts in that direction. At the same time we recognise the justice of the complaints of those Militia officers who contend that their service is being sacrificed to the prevailing inclination of the heads of the War Office to lump the figures of the Auxiliary Forces together for the purposes of Parliamentary statements. By this means the Militia is placed in a false position. It is the bounden duty of the Government to at once introduce such measures as will fill the Militia ranks. Until it has done that it ought to regard with disfavour any attempts to bring new Volunteer companies into existence, for unless it does so it will in the long run do injury to all Services, without conferring substantial benefit on any. It has to be remembered that the Militia is a valuable feeder to the Army. The stronger it is the better will be the chances of filling up gaps in the regiments of the line when emergencies arise. It is, therefore, the most suicidal policy to allow it to labour under the serious disadvantages which it has done, and no excuse can be offered for those in authority who year by year regard with indifference returns which show at once that there is something absolutely wrong in its administration at Headquarters, a state of things which no attempt is made to put right. What the Government ought to do now is to increase the attractions of the Militia, and bring it to its full establishment. Until it has done that it is the height of folly for it to devote its energies to raising more men for the Volunteers, as it would naturally create false impressions, and must in the end be productive of injury all round.

It is satisfactory to know that there is no deterioration in the physique of the candidates who are coming forward for Army commissions. The reports to the War Office furnished by the medical boards are most encouraging under this head. The rejections are comparatively few, for the young men who offer themselves are all that could be desired, and the University candidates are said to be excellent.

Where are the Boer guns? It is the great and only mystery of the war, and now that peace is in sight it grows deeper than ever. There were big guns before Kimberley, in the Magersfontein defences, in front of Mafeking, in the Collesberg region, and in Natal. In short the enemy gaily transported their artillery to half a dozen widely-separated points in a territory as large as Europe without Russia. Since Lord Roberts took the field in February they have been gradually retreating, until the area of their resistance has narrowed to a small circle in the Orange River Colony and the Transvaal; nevertheless they have almost invariably managed to carry away with them their heavy artillery with an ease that has astonished everybody. Even at Paardeberg the capture of big guns was distinctly disappointing. Where can the rest be? Or is the Lydenburg district being transformed into a huge arsenal. The dismantled forts at Pretoria and Johannesburg might be explained by supposing that their guns were employed in the field, but now that the main body of the enemy has been dispersed with small captures of artillery on our part, the mystery must be cleared up in some other way. It is easy enough to understand how the Boers escaped with their heavy transport when they were in possession of the railways, and easy enough to understand that, with wide turning movements on our side, an enemy, which is past-master in the art of retreating, should be able to get away without leaving anything behind. But with the ox, the slowest of all transport animals, as his sole means of moving heavy guns, the case should be different. But apparently, it is nothing of the kind. After nearly every engagement away travel the Boer guns, and we have no better satisfaction than the sight of the dust they raise in the blue of distance. In the west, where General Baden-Powell and Sir Archibald Hunter are doing such excellent work in restoring order, the thing is even more inexplicable. Boers are surrendering in every direction, stands of arms are growing, and the country is rapidly being pacified; but, so far, no Pom-Poms, Creusots, or Krupp guns have been surrendered. Until they are the war cannot be regarded as at an end.

Colonels E. W. D. Ward, C.B., and S. J. Lea, C.B., Army Service Corps, completed on June 15 the term of service in the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, which rendered them liable to retirement. Under the terms of the Royal Warrant, however, a proportion of officers on the supernumerary list can be specially selected to complete a total of twelve authorised to be retained for more lengthened service. Whilst again, so long as the war lasts in South Africa, the Secretary of State has the right to retain the services of all officers of the corps for such time as it may be necessary to do so. Under these conditions Colonels Ward and Lea are both held on. Colonels M. Graham and J. A. Boyd, C.B., have just been placed on the Retired List on completion of service. The other officers of the Army Service Corps coming under the limitation rule this year are Colonels A. W. Collard, June 29 (extended for service in China); J. Whitley, August 25; E. P. B. Smith and W. F. Moore, October 10; C. E. Heath, November 12, and J. W. B. Parkin, November 14. Some few of these will be certain to be selected for further employment. At the same time it seems to us that it would be a fairer and more practical course to remove retained officers from the corps under Article 183B. of the Royal Warrant of April 2, 1894, making those only temporarily retained supernumerary in the strict sense. The officers removed from the corps as colonels are granted the substantive rank as well as the increased pay and allowances, so that they could have no grievance. We fail to see that any advantage is gained by making the regulations complicated.

Lord Ebrington and the Chairman of the Dartmoor Committee of the Devon County Council are anxious that the Government should acquire Dartmoor as a training ground for our troops. There is much to be said in favour of the proposal. Dartmoor possesses great natural advantages. As an artillery training place it has few equals. At present, as Sir Roper Lethbridge who knows the neighbourhood well, said the other day, one of the finest butts for artillery practice in the world is afforded by the rugged, boulder-strewn heights of Yes Tor, a typical "kopje" rising above the table-land of the moor to a height of over 2,000ft.—the highest ground in England south of Snowdon; and its widely extending spurs enable shells to be fired at the long ranges of those modern guns of which we have had such unpleasant experience in South Africa with practically no danger to the inhabitants of the neighbourhood. Scattered over Dartmoor there are innumerable similar "kopjes," with in some places wild, rocky ravines and swift rivers, in others spruets and impassable "mires" or bogs—exactly the sort of country to accustom our soldiers to such mountaineering warfare as they have been having in South Africa. It could not but be of immense advantage to have this ground as an occasional training place. There are difficulties, some suggest, in the way of acquiring the land. "A short Act of Parliament," it has been said by Mr. Huxham Watson, "would be necessary to provide for every difficulty in the case." But, we entirely support the view of Sir Roper Lethbridge that "whether a 'short Act' or a long Act, or a dozen Acts be required, surely the country has learnt from bitter experience that the object to be attained—that of enabling our officers to obtain proper training in handling our brave troops, and our men proper training in the use of modern weapons—must be attained, whatever may be the cost."

SALISBURY PLAIN.—The Midland and South-Western Junction Railway Company has been authorised by the War Office to immediately begin the construction of a new railway from their Ludgershall station to the military headquarters on Salisbury Plain. The line will be nearly three miles long, and there will be a station, provided with extensive accommodation, at Tedworth, in close proximity to the site of the large barracks, army ordnance and other depots, the erection of which was sanctioned in the special military vote of £1,600,000 last session. The railway, which is to be completed within something like a year from the present time, will be primarily used for the conveyance from the M. and S.W.J.R. system at Ludgershall to Tedworth of the immense quantities of materials required for the building operations there, in order to avoid the expense and inconvenience of cartage, but it will ultimately be used as a passenger and goods line.

The Queen's kindness has been once more exemplified by the gift of a beautiful silver cup to the little son of the late Lieut.-Colonel Eagar, 2nd Batn. Royal Irish Rifles, who was wounded at Stormberg, and died of wounds on February 13. The cup bears the inscription:—"Victor Alexander Averell William Denison Eagar, from his godmother, Victoria R.I., 1900." Mrs. Eagar, who resides at Newcastle, co. Down, is naturally very proud of her Majesty's wholly unexpected kindness.

The Princess of Wales is sending out to the war twenty nurses at once, selected from the nursing staff of the London Hospital. The Prince and Princess of Wales have adapted and fitted up a very pretty farmhouse close to Sandringham for the use of officers invalided from the war who need convalescent help and have nowhere to go. Every detail of the arrangements and the decoration have had the personal attention of the Princess herself. Their Royal Highnesses' intention is to offer this home in the first place to colonial officers, and they have directed that an invitation from them should be given to any such officers to whom the rest and quiet would be beneficial. During their stay the officers will be the guests of the Prince and Princess.

The Commander-in-Chief in India telegraphed to Lord Roberts last week:—"The Army in India and your many friends amongst the native Princes are full of admiration for the successful operations under your lordship's brilliant leadership." Lord Roberts replied on Saturday:—"On behalf of myself and the force which it is my privilege to command, I tender you and all our comrades of the Indian Army our grateful thanks for your congratulations."

Replying for the Army at a Masonic banquet at Simla, on the 12th ult., General Sir Power Palmer spoke of the share he proposed to take another year in Masonic interests in Simla, in the event of the Cabinet at home deciding that he was to stay on in his present appointment.

The Duke of Connaught will visit Londonderry at the end of the month in connection with the formal opening and manning of the new forts at the entrance of Lough Swilly.

Much sympathy will be felt for Lieut.-General Sir Robert Cunliffe Low, commanding the forces in Bombay, in the loss of his wife, who died suddenly last week at Poona. The deceased lady, Constance by name, was the daughter of the late Captain Taylor, of the Honourable East India Company's service, and married, in 1862, Sir Robert Low, who was at the time a captain in the 1st Bengal European Cavalry. Lady Low was much beloved by all who knew her.

On Wednesday night Lieut.-General Sir George White was entertained to dinner by Sir Walter Peace, Agent-General for Natal, at St. Stephen's Club, Westminster, and advantage was taken of the occasion to present him with a sword of honour from the residents of Ladysmith, and a service of plate from the working-men of Durban. Sir Walter Peace, in making the presentations, mentioned that the workmen's gift was all the more pleasing because it was raised by a shilling subscription, which allowed every man to give his mite. Sir George White paid a tribute to the manner in which the civilians of Ladysmith came forward to help him. The women in Ladysmith, rather than desert their homes, decided to face the siege. So long as we had such mothers we need not be afraid of the degeneration of the race. General White dined with the Queen and Royal Family at Windsor Castle on Thursday, returning to London the same evening. He left England yesterday for Gibraltar to take up his duties as Governor.

Lieut.-General Sir J. W. Cox, Colonel of the Bedfordshire Regiment, has been offered and has accepted transfer to the Somersetshire Light Infantry, and is succeeded at the head of the Bedfordshire Regiment by Lieut.-General W. C. Bancroft. Sir J. W. Cox received his first commission in the old 13th, June 26, 1838, and his connection with the regiment continued up to 1865, when he was placed on half-pay as 2nd Lieut.-Colonel. He served with it in the Afghan Campaign, 1840-41; in the Crimea, and through the Indian Mutiny. General Bancroft exchanged to the old 16th, August 2, 1850, and commanded the 2nd Batn. August 14, 1867, to April 12, 1879.

It has been decided not to bring the body of Lieut.-General Sir W. Penn-Symons home from Natal for interment.

Major-General Sir Edward Robert Prevost Woodgate, who died from his wounds at the Mooi River, Natal, on March 23, at the age of 55, bequeathed to his brother, Walter Bradford Woodgate, £100 and his personal and household effects; and to his brothers, Arthur Seymour Woodgate and Gerald Marriott Woodgate, £100 each. The testator left his residuary estate in trust in equal shares for his five sisters, Henrietta Newman Woodgate, Eleanor Woodgate, Alice Rose Woodgate, Julia Mary Woodgate, and Grace Maria Woodgate. The late Sir Edward Woodgate's personal estate has been valued at £5,188 6s. 2d. net.

Major-General Sir Henry Colville, whose division has been broken up in consequence of the necessity of the British forces being divided into smaller units, left Pretoria at the end of last week en route to England.

Mr. MacNeill asked the First Lord of the Treasury whether he was aware that Landdrost Baumann, of Hoopstad, had in his keeping the rifle, revolver, and other arms the late Major-General Wauchope had with him when he fell at Magersfontein, and also some small trinkets belonging to the general, and had authorised Mr. Michael Davitt to state that he would hold these articles in safe keeping till some opportunity presents itself of forwarding them to the family of General Wauchope; and whether the Government, having regard to the offer of Mr. Baumann, would take any steps to provide for the immediate forwarding of these relics of General Wauchope to his relatives. Mr. Balfour said, in reply, that no official information had been received on the subject; but Lord Roberts had been requested by telegraph to make inquiries, and, if possible, to send the information.

Major-General H. J. Hallows left Jamaica on Tuesday for England on vacating his command of the troops at the station, which he has held since December 19, 1894. It need scarcely be said how much the departure of General Hallows will be regretted after the steps taken last year to secure for him an extension, which it was decided to grant for six months, in deference to the wishes of all classes in the island.

Major-General F. T. Lloyd, C.B., R.A., Governor of the Royal Military Academy, has been granted a Distinguished Service Reward of £100 a year. General Lloyd joined the Army October 1, 1857. He served in the Egyptian War 1882 (medal and bronze star); in the Sudan Expedition 1884, in command R.A., including battles of Teb and Tamai (three times mentioned

Major-General F. G. Berkeley will be placed on the retired list on the 21st inst., on completing seven years in non-employment.

Brigadier-General W. H. Lyster, I.S.C., now on leave in England, has been permitted to resign his command of the Nagpore District, Madras, and will not return to India.

Colonel Sir C. Holled Smith, late King's Royal Rifles, is about to be promoted to the rank of Major-General on the establishment.

Colonel Lord Downe, C.I.E., late 10th Hussars, having been relieved of his duties as officer in charge of foreign military attachés on the staff of Lord Roberts, has left Cape Town for England.

Colonel H. J. de B. de Berniere completes his five years in command of the 29th Regimental District at Worcester on Monday, when he is succeeded by Colonel W. S. Clarke, lately commanding the 1st Batn. Worcestershire Regiment.

Colonel H. Hall, Commandant, Royal Hibernian Military School, has been granted a Distinguished Service Reward of £60 a year.

Colonel J. Long, R.A., who commanded the guns at Colenso, is stated by several papers this week to have been placed on half-pay. The news, however, comes rather late in the day, for Colonel Long's transfer to the Half-Pay List took place more than a month ago, as reference to the June Army List will show. The sympathy for Colonel Long throughout the Service is very great.

Colonel Sir H. McCallum, R.E., A.D.C., arrived at St. John's on Thursday evening, and resumed his duties as Governor of Newfoundland from leave in England.

Colonel F. Cochran, late Hampshire Regiment, attained the age limit on the 27th ult., and would in ordinary circumstances have been retired; but it has been decided to retain him on the active list, so that he may continue to discharge for the present the duties of Deputy Judge-Advocate at headquarters, which position he has filled since the end of October last to the great advantage of the Service.

Colonel R. B. Mainwaring, C.M.G., is on passage home from the Cape in the Kildonan Castle in charge of invalids. He left on the 23rd ult., and on arrival will take over command of the 23rd Regimental District, Wrexham, to which he has been appointed.

Colonel W. B. Wade, A.P.D., Chief Paymaster in South Africa, attains the limit of age on Wednesday next, but will be retained in the Service for the present as a supernumerary.

Colonel Sir Charles Leslie, Bart., C.B., I.S.C., is in temporary command at Abbottabad, vice Colonel G. H. C. Dyce, I.S.C., officiating D.A.G., Bengal.

Colonel J. P. C. Neville, I.S.C., A.Q.M.G., Madras Army Headquarters, has been appointed D.A.G., Madras, vice Brigadier-General G. Henry, R.E., transferred to Indian Army Headquarters in a similar capacity, vice Brigadier-General F. G. Barrow, C.B., I.S.C., left for China as Chief of the Staff. Lieut.-Colonel A. B. Fenton, I.S.C., takes Colonel Neville's place as A.Q.M.G.

Colonel T. Deane, C.B., retired list, late Director of Remounts in India, who has rendered such valuable service to the Imperial Yeomanry, has gone to South Africa.

Colonel A. A. Pearson, I.S.C., and Lieut.-Colonel F. H. Kelly, R.E., have been selected to officiate as A.A.G., Kurrachee and Quetta Districts respectively, vice Lieut.-Colonels Swain and O'Sullivan.

Colonel C. H. Stoddart is the only officer of the Indian Staff Corps who comes under the age rule this month. He completes his time on the 17th inst.

Lieut.-Colonel W. E. Blewitt, R.F.A., will take up his duties as a member of the Ordnance Committee in relief of Lieut.-Colonel H. P. Willoughby on Tuesday next.

Lieut.-Colonel P. W. Watts, retired list, Royal Irish Regiment, has joined at Colchester as Staff Officer for Instruction, Eastern District.

Lieut.-Colonel E. M. Alexander, retired list, late Seaforth Highlanders, of Bridge of Allan, has been appointed a J.P. for Stirlingshire.

Lieut.-Colonel W. Campbell, retired list, R.A.M.C., in medical charge of the Guards Depot, Caterham, has been selected for the medical charge of the National Rifle Association Camp at Bisley.

The War Office has published a list of officers serving with the Chinese Regiment from Wei Hai Wei now at the front in China:—Lieut.-Colonel H. Bower, I.S.C.; Majors C. D. Bruce, Duke of Wellington's Regiment (Second in Command), and G. E. Pereira, Grenadier Guards; Captains W. M. Watson, Duke of Wellington's Regiment, A. A. S. Barnes, Wiltshire Regiment, G. F. Molyneux Montgomerie, Grenadier Guards, (Adj't.) A. J. Hill, East Surrey Regiment, C. F. Menzies, South Lancashire Regiment, B. C. Fairfax, Durham Light Infantry, and L. A. E. Ollivant, Royal Fusiliers; and Lieutenants R. N. Bray, Duke of Wellington's Regiment, W. T. Layard, Northamptonshire Regiment, and G. C. Brooke, Border Regiment.

The Earl of Hopetoun, G.C.M.G., Hon. Lieut.-Colonel-Commandant Forth Division Submarine Miners Volunteers, R.E., and Captain Lanarkshire Yeomanry, has been appointed Knight of the Order of the Thistle in the room of the late Duke of Argyll.

Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel W. S. Gordon, R.E., Director of Engineering and Stores, Egyptian Army, has arrived home from Cairo on leave until the middle of September.

Among the appointments as Aide-de-Camp in the South African Field Force, which have been made as the result of the re-arrangement of commands, are those of Major W. J. Mackeson, 7th Dragoon Guards, to the staff of Major-General J. B. Dickson, C.B.; Captains the Marquis of Tullibardine, Royal Horse Guards, to that of Brigadier-General J. F. Burn-Murdoch; the Hon. L. R. D. Gray, the Carabineers, to Brigadier-General T. C. Porter; F. W. Wormald, 7th Hussars, to Brigadier-General J. R. P. Gordon; H. G. De Pledge, 19th Hussars, to Major-General Lord Dundonald, C.B.; E. A. Saunders, R.A., to Major-General C. W. H. Douglas, A.D.C.; R. D. Whigham, Royal Lancashire Regiment, to Major-General H. A. MacDonald, C.B.; L. H. Spry, West Yorkshire Regiment, to Brigadier-General F. W. Kitchener; F. B. Maurice, Derbyshire Regiment, to Lieut.-General T. Kelly-Kenny, C.B.; and A. R. Hoskins, North Staffordshire Regiment, to Major-General J. G. Maxwell, D.S.O.; and Lieuts. H. B. Abadie, 11th Hussars, to Lieut.-General Sir A. Hunter; F. D. Farquhar, Coldstream Guards, to Lieut.-General R. Pole-Carew, C.B.; A. E. McNamara, Queen's Regiment, to Lieut.-General Sir Francis Clery; A. W. Rickman, Northumberland Fusiliers, to Major-General R. E. Allen; G. W. Howard, Essex Regiment, to Brigadier-General T. R. Stephenson; C. E. Balfour, King's Royal Rifles, to Lieut.-General the Hon. N. G. Lyttelton, C.B.; Hon. R. A. Campbell, Cameron Highlanders, to Lieut.-General Sir H. Jolville; and L. F. Renny, Royal Dublin Fusiliers, to Major-General C. D. Cooper.

Major W. E. Fairholme, R.F.A., will be Assistant Military Secretary to Lieut.-General Sir George White at Gibraltar, and Lieutenants R. G. Hooper, 5th Lancers, and H. A. Cape, 18th Hussars, Aides-de-Camp.

Major C. M. T. Western, R.F.A., has been confirmed in his appointment as Assistant Military Secretary to Lieut.-General Sir George Wolseley, commanding the troops in Madras.

Major H. A. Kinloch, King's Royal Rifles, Inspector of Musketry in the Southern District, has been selected to command the Provisional Battalion of Public Schools Volunteers which will assemble in camp at Aldershot on July 30 for training till August 15. The battalion, estimated at a thousand strong, will be encamped at Government House.

Captain H. F. Thuillier, R.E., has been awarded the Gold Medal of the Royal United Service Institution of India. The subject was the use of light railways of two-feet six-inches gauge, in Indian warfare, and the organisation and working of railway corps. Captain G. Lubbock, R.E., was awarded the silver medal.

Captain C. W. Griffith, 2nd Bombay Lancers, has been appointed Adjutant of the Calcutta Light Horse, Central Bengal Light Horse and Chota Mounted Rifles.

Captain A. W. S. Wingate, 14th Bengal Lancers, and Havildar Gurdit Singh, 45th Sikhs, have been awarded by the Commander-in-Chief in India the MacGregor memorial medals for 1900, the latter also receiving a gratuity of 100rs.

Captain S. C. Byrne, 21st Middlesex Rifles, has been appointed to the City Imperial Volunteers, with the temporary rank of Captain in the Army; and Captains R. Carr, Queen's Westminster Rifles, and A. A. C. Selfe, 2nd V.B. Middlesex Regiment, as Lieuts., with the temporary rank of Lieuts. in the Army, to go out with the C.I.V. reinforcement leaving for the Cape next week.

The officers from other regiments who will be attached to the regiments going to China in order to make a full complement of twelve are:—

To 1st Bengal Lancers.—Capt. A. P. Browne, Central India Horse; and Lieut. J. R. Gausson, 3rd Bengal Cavalry.

Army Foreign.

The Chinese Army is divided into three lines of defence, viz., regular army, reserves under arms, and reserves between sixteen and sixty years of age, who are called out for training for only a few days in the year. The fighting troops and reserves under arms form what may be termed the Imperial standing army. It is impossible to arrive at any definite conclusion as to their strength, but it is reckoned that there are 60,000 cavalry and 850,000 infantry and artillery. Major A. E. J. Marshall, the British officer who is, perhaps, one of the best authorities, has summed up the number and disposition of the forces thus:—

FIGHTING TROOPS.

Manchurian Field Force	50,000
Manchurian Irregulars	20,000
Fighting Braves	125,000
Chien-Chun, or Disciplined Troops	10,000
	205,000

RESERVES UNDER ARMS.

Peking Field Force	13,000
Banner Troops in Peking	75,000
Banner Troops in Provinces	95,000
Luh-Ying, or Green Standard Regiments	506,000
	689,000

The armament of the army is an unknown quantity. Quite recently, it is reported, the Chinese arsenals have turned out a number of 3.7cm. quick-firing mountain guns, but their present whereabouts are unknown. The army possesses also a respectable stock of machine-guns of various patterns. They have besides many native-made rifles of lin. calibre, each carried and manipulated by two men. The weapon is 9ft long, and fitted with a home-made Mauser or Mannlicher breech-mechanism, according to fancy. It has recently been decided to re-arm the whole infantry with one standard pattern of rifle, and the choice has fallen upon the Lee, which has a calibre of .433in.

General Jamant has created a sensation in France by resigning his position as Commander-in-Chief of the Army. This step follows very closely on the departure of General de Gallifet from the War Office. General Jamant's reason for retiring is that "the instability of the Chief of the Army Staff is incompatible with the formation and the control of forces in the field." General Brugere, the successor of General Jamant, will retain his post as Military Governor of Paris, as did General Saussier. General Penderzec will, it is stated, be appointed Chief of the General Staff of the Army, in the room of General Delanne, whose resignation has also been accepted. General Penderzec is at present Chief of the Staff of the Military Governor of Paris.

The new German quick-firing field gun, as our readers are aware, is Krupp's "C. 96." But technical progress is rapid, and already Krupp has introduced a new gun with some improvement, known as "C. 99." The differences between the two guns do not appear to be considerable, but the new piece marks another step. It is constructed of nickel steel, described as secure against rupture in all circumstances, and it consists of the body of the gun, the jacket, and the pivot breech block upon the Krupp system. The Deutsche Heeres-Zeitung remarks that the new gun reaches a very high point in ordnance construction, but that it does not in any way discredit the gun which has lately been adopted for the German Army.

The Russian Imperial Manœuvres will take place in August between Kursk and Orel, the Grand Duke Nicolaivitch being the umpire. Not less than 154 battalions of infantry, seventy-eight squadrons of cavalry, and 348 guns will take part in these manœuvres, forming two armies. The army of Moscow (seventy-five battalions, thirty-seven squadrons, and 168 guns) will be under command of the Grand Duke Sergius Alexandrovitch, while the Southern army (seventy-nine battalions, forty-one squadrons, and 180 guns), will be under that of General Kouropatkin, the Minister of War. The corps cavalry will in each case have the strength of a division and the cavalry attached to the divisions of each of the two army corps of the Moscow army will comprise a regiment of six squadrons, while in the case of the Southern army each of the Army corps will have a brigade of Cossacks, each of eight sotnias. The general idea of the manœuvres is as follows:—The principal army marching from the west crosses the Dnieper at Orsha and Ratchitza and marches upon Moscow. The southern army covering the right flank of the principal army, advancing from Kursk, attempts to capture Orel and the railway, uniting that place with Briansk. But, as the enemy is in superior numbers, this southern army is obliged at first to endeavour to hold a position at Kursk, and only to attempt to accomplish its object after having been reinforced. The principal army of the east falls back upon Moscow, before the enemy who have crossed the Dnieper, and the Moscow army, in order to check the enemy upon the Smolensk and Briansk line, attempts to defeat the southern army advancing from Kursk.

The Progrès Militaire devotes an article to our medical service in South Africa, chiefly taking its intelligence from the British Medical Journal. It draws the conclusion that the first necessity is to possess in time of peace a sufficient body of medical officers to cope with the probable number of sick and wounded, so that, at the declaration of war, the civil surgeons may be properly embodied and employed in their particular work, while the special functions of the military medical officer, including command, sanitary formations, administration, hygienic preparation, and other matters, may be reserved exclusively to the regular military practitioner. It is almost equally necessary, says our contemporary, to have a sufficient number of infirmiry servants and nurses in proportion to the force employed, while the material of the medical branch is, of course, a first necessity.

THE FORCES OF NEW SOUTH WALES. (WITH COLOURED SUPPLEMENT.)

The military forces of New South Wales are the most considerable in the Australian colonies. The mounted brigade includes the New South Wales Lancers, the Mounted Rifles, and the 1st Australian (Volunteer) Horse, and there is a permanent regiment of Royal Australian Artillery, in addition to the New South Wales Artillery Regiment. The colony has also a corps of engineers and four infantry regiments, apart from the Volunteer infantry, in which are included the Union Volunteer Regiment, the Scottish Rifles, the Irish Rifles, the Australian Rifles, the St. George's Rifles, and the National Guard. The other forces of the colony are the Railway Volunteer Corps, the Army Service Corps, and the Army Medical Corps, and there is a Veterinary Department. The patriotism of the colony at the outbreak of the war was a bright page in our colonial history. As the premier colony, New South Wales led the way, and the correspondent of the Times at Sydney remarked that marvels were wrought in the fire of enthusiasm that would last long in the memory of the New Australia. The New South Wales Lancers are well-known in this country. They have done excellent service in South Africa, like all the other colonial forces. The New South Wales military contingent in South Africa comprises, in addition to the Lancers, the 1st Australian (Volunteer) Horse, a unit of mounted rifles, the "A" battery of the New South Wales Regiment of Royal Australian Artillery, an infantry unit, and a unit of the Army Medical Corps.

The Lancers had some part in Lord Methuen's battles, but the Australians were chiefly employed, earlier in the campaign, on the northern border of Cape Colony. In January, near Slingersfontein, a party of the Lancers was cut to pieces, and a number of the men, after making an unavailing and prolonged resistance, were compelled to surrender. The men of New South Wales were then sent up to Modder River, and the Lancers, forming part of General Porter's brigade, were with General French in the relief of Kimberley. They afterwards marched with the troops upon Bloemfontein, and took part in several engagements, notably in the fight at Driefontein. The mounted infantry were concerned in the same operations, and all the New South Wales forces were employed in the advance to Pretoria.

The colony also contributed largely to the Bushmen's contingent. The movement was, in fact, initiated by Major J. Randal Carey, and the utmost enthusiasm prevailed in Sydney, where men and money were freely forthcoming, with the result that a very fine force joined General Carrington in the operations on the Rhodesian side. The Empire has reason to be proud of the excellent troops of New South Wales.

THE SICK AND WOUNDED IN WAR.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Having recently returned from South Africa, where I held a position on the staff, which enabled me to form an accurate judgment, until I was laid low with enteric fever, I can fully endorse the views of those who say that Lord Roberts and his staff did all they could to see that things were made as comfortable as possible for the sick and wounded. And as for the medical officers, I cannot find words complimentary enough in which to write of their efforts. But the system, I maintain, is as bad as it well could be. Not that I am surprised. What can be expected when in every garrison in the kingdom in peace time the doctor is regarded with distrust, and in every Service club he is considered more or less the inferior of his more combatant brother. I have been one of those who have held for some years that this feeling was most prejudicial to the Army in every way, being most lowering to it in a social sense, and very damaging from the professional aspect. Lord Roberts, to my knowledge, has done his utmost to combat the mischief, but the seeds had taken such deep root during a long period of peace that it was due entirely to the noble instincts of the doctor that failure was not complete. But, having learnt our lesson, do let us profit by it; do let us come out of this campaign free from the old prejudice, and do—and this is a most essential point—let the committees of Service clubs take a lead in producing that better feeling which ought to exist. I have been in South Africa, and have seen for myself what worthy good fellows the doctors are when they are put to the test of war. I have seen, too, the cruel results of the misunderstandings to which I refer. I have myself been struck down by disease, and been saved by the Army doctor's care and attention. I trust, therefore, you will allow me to say that to the miserable feeling of petty jealousy hitherto existing I attribute much of the breakdown of system; for where it has not broken down the credit has been due to the doctors, who have done their duty regardless of all the snubs administered during periods of peace. I am by no means alone in taking the view I do, for on the transport in which I came home it was agreed by all that the doctors have done credit to their calling. But the sick man is apt, perhaps, to be more generous than he who is in robust health. Two cases came under my own eyes in which doctors tended the wounded, without fear and without thought of reward, under the heaviest fire in this campaign. Tales have been told me of others who have displayed similar gallantry. Yet these are the men who in peace time the whole Service is required by orders from the Service clubs to condemn, and, if need be, insult. There is growing up in the Army a very strong impression that this state of things is wrong and in South Africa the feeling when I left was deep-rooted on the subject. I hope, therefore, that you will permit me to make known my ideas, endorsing as they do those of the correspondent whom you quoted last week, and, I may say further, of every officer of any rank whom I met in South Africa. It may be well for those who have been at home during the last few months, whilst others have been giving their lives and shedding their blood so freely at the front, to know that all ranks of the Army have learnt to recognise the important part which the Army doctor plays in a modern campaign; and the most serious consequences will arise if the medical service continues to be discredited and the whole medical arrangements of the Army put out of gear to the disadvantage of the suffering soldiers at the bidding of ruling spirits in Service clubland, which is really the case just now, as every soldier who has taken part in the South African campaign knows well. WAR SUMMARY.

Saturday, June 30.

The enveloping movement against De Wet was completed to-day according to the plan laid down by the Commander-in-Chief, by Sir Francis Clery's occupation of Vlaaklaagte. This place is 21 miles from Standerton, and the railway is stated to have been intact the whole of that distance. There was one slight skirmish with the Boers, but they were driven back.

News of the captured Irish Yeomanry came to hand from Standerton. The battalion which capitulated at Lindley, under Lieut.-Col. Spragge, D.S.O. fought, it seems, most gallantly for five days, hemmed in on a kopje, until their ammunition was exhausted, and they were reduced to jam only as rations. They well upheld the honour of their land.

The horses of the Boer commandoes opposing Gen. Rundle stated to be in a miserable condition and dying in large numbers for want of proper food and attention. There is also a great deficiency of ammunition for the guns.

Sunday, July 1.

Sir Redvers Buller telegraphed from Standerton that Major-Gen. Talbot Coke, with 10th Brigade, made reconnaissance on June 29 towards Amersfoort. He found 2,000 of the enemy there with guns occupying a strong position. Having shelled them he retired, and was not followed up by enemy. His casualties were two men killed and six men wounded.

Monday, July 2.

From Pretoria news came to hand that "supplies are being brought into market freely from the surrounding district, and everything is settling down, the quiet and orderly behaviour of the British troops, and the excellent feeling they display towards the Dutch population, having done much to produce confidence."

Tuesday, July 3.

Lord Roberts, in a telegram received to-day, stated that Gen. Hunter had crossed the Vaal on his way to Frankfort to join hands with Gen. Macdonald's Brigade from Heilbron. Sir Redvers Buller's leading brigade had, his Lordship went on to say, left Standerton for Greylingstad, a town on the Johannesburg railway midway between Standerton and Heidelberg.

Wednesday, July 4.

Sir Redvers Buller telegraphed to the Secretary of State for War from Standerton at 11.40 a.m.:—"Gen. Clery from Graylingstad joined hands at Zuikersbosch Rand River with Gen. Hart from Heidelberg. He met with but slight opposition during his march."

A flying column under Col. Hickman, Worcester-shire Regiment, consisting solely of mounted men, moved north from Kroonstad to-day to complete the cordon round the Boers bases in the Orange River Colony from the south-west.

Thursday, July 5.

Lord Roberts sent a despatch from Pretoria announcing that several respectable Boers surrendered to Gen. Hart yesterday, and a soldiers' home was opened at Heidelberg, the inhabitants helping and subscribing £40 towards initial expenses. Gen. Barton reports that 2,631 stands of arms have been delivered up at Klerksdorp, Krugersdorp, and Potchefstroom to date. Lord Roberts had inspected Mahon's small force, which did such excellent work in the relief of the Mafeking garrison. "The Imperial Light Horse," he said, "which I purposely brought from Natal to take part in the expedition, are a most soldierly workmanlike body of men."

The Boers made a desperate attempt to regain Ficksburg during the night. They attacked shortly after 12 o'clock. The fighting was short but sharp. It lasted an hour. This is regarded as the enemy's last effort to reoccupy the town. The Boers are reported by Reuter's correspondent to be short of Mauser ammunition. They cannot use the ammunition they have captured.

Friday, July 6.

Lady Roberts is now in Pretoria. The train in which she travelled was preceded on the journey by an armoured train.

The postal service is now open between Johannesburg and Pretoria. An enormous mail has accumulated.

Remounts are said to be arriving in large numbers at Pretoria. "The Remount and Veterinary Departments," a telegram says, "have been working splendidly, and their perfect organisation reflects the highest credit on Cols. Stevenson and Matthews, and those serving under them. The labours of all are incessant, but the arrangements could scarcely be better."

Parties of Boers are arriving daily in the different camps to surrender, all saying the same, that they are disgusted with the lies which have been told them by their leaders. Mr. Steyn is said to have removed what remains of his Government from Bethlehem to Reitz village, about 30 miles to the north east of Trommel. The enemy's laager on the Tafelberg outside Senekal has disappeared. Prisoners state that the men in the Boer commandoes have little to eat and are only detained by force. Mr. Steyn is said to have strong guards round the laagers at night, and burghers found attempting to escape are sjamboked. Most of the men who are now surrendering have escaped from the laagers in the hope of getting back to their homes.

Dr. Conan Doyle, writing from the Langman Hospital, Bloemfontein, says, in dealing with the scourge of enteric that swept over the camp:—"We have had no death yet (absit omen) from among the inoculated, and more than once we have diagnosed the inoculation from the temperature chart before being informed of it."

The railway from Natal was to have been opened to-day as far as Johannesburg. This will give Lord Roberts a quicker and safer line of communication to the sea than that which runs through the Orange River Colony and Cape Colony, and will consequently affect the situation materially.

Total casualties since the beginning of the war up to the end of last week:—

	Officers.	N.C.O. & Men
Killed	254	2,403
Died of wounds ...	70	610
Missing and prisoners (excluding those who have been recovered)	65	2,624
Died of disease ...	133	4,204
Accidental deaths ...	—	66
Sent home as invalids...	844	18,433
	1,366	28,340

Total Losses (exclusive of sick and wounded men now in British Hospitals in South Africa) ... 29,706

A sum of £50 is to be issued to adjutants and quartermasters of embodied Militia in aid of the expenses to which they have been put. The payment of this sum may be made at once by paymasters or agents.

It is intimated that Militiamen who are found unfit after having become embodied are to be treated as soldiers of the Regular forces, and their documents submitted to Chelsea, accompanied in each case by the proceedings of a medical board. Militia Reserve men who are found permanently unfit for service abroad are to be struck off the strength of the Militia Reserve, but retained in the Militia if fit for service in that force.

It has been announced by Major-Gen. T. A. Cooke, commanding at Salisbury Plain, under instructions from the War Office, that it has been decided that Militia battalions of Fusilier regiments are not to receive the full-dress head-dress, but that steps have now been taken to provide a hat for temporary purposes during the summer season for those units which are not in possession of a full-dress head-dress. Under these circumstances Major-Gen. Cooke's previous instructions regarding the provision of cap covers or hats for the troops under his command are cancelled.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

DRAGOON.—The question has not yet been considered.

FAIR PLAY.—We quite agree with your view, but the present is scarcely the time to ventilate the matter.

J. S. D.—August 2, 1872.

TARASON.—Three years.

PARENT.—The allowance would be ample.

An important addition has been made to the Army Musketry Regulations:—"In order to accustom the men to adapt the firing position to the irregularities of the ground, and at the same time to avail themselves of cover, shelter trenches should be made on all ranges, and a certain number of rounds fired from them. Similarly, when possible, a certain amount of broken ground should be provided."

The Farm and Colonisation Company is doing good work in starting in life young men who are anxious to settle in the Colonies and elsewhere. The company has just acquired a large tract of farm land in South Dakota, which offers special facilities to those in search of an opening in life who have a £100 or so at command.

HEALTH IN THE BATTLEFIELD IS KEPT AND RESTORED BY HOFF'S FLUID MALT EXTRACT.—Dr. ROBICEK, Imp. General Major, Physician of the AUSTRIAN Army, writes:—"JOHANN HOFF'S MALT EXTRACT has been of great service to us in convalescence from intermittent fever, when our soldiers suffered from that malady and from wakefulness. The RUSSIAN Military Hospital reports:—"We had very many cases of Amputation, in all of which the Tonic and refreshing qualities of HOFF'S MALT proved very serviceable. Signed, Dr. BERING, Physician. Send this MALT to your Friends in the field, who will appreciate it. M. HOFF, HAMBURG, must be on all labels. London House: 29, NEW BRIDGE STREET, E.C."

Obituary.

NAVY.

Capt. Walter John Whiffin, R.M.A., of the Goliath, died at Aden on the 28th ult., of heat apoplexy, aged 34. He was eldest son of the late J. G. Whiffin, Paymaster-in-Chief, R.N. He joined the Service Sept. 1, 1883, became Captain Sept. 1, 1894, and was Assistant Professor of Fortification, Royal Naval College, Jan. 1, 1892 to Jan. 1, 1897.

Capt. W. H. Beyts, R.M.A., whose death occurred during the recent advance on Peking under Vice-Admiral Sir Edward Seymour, was, like his brother officer, the gallant Capt. Guy Senior, R.M.A., who fell in action at Graspan, promoted Captain in June last at an unusually early age. They were next to each other on the list of officers; it is, therefore, a peculiarly tragic incident that both should have fallen while bravely leading their men in action with most vindictive opponents.

ARMY.

Gen. James Gathorne Cookson, retired list, Madras Cavalry, died at Blackheath on the 28th ult., aged 79. He was the only surviving son of the late Lieut.-Gen. George Cookson, R.A. Joining the Army April 2, 1841, he became Captain Nov. 28, 1854; Major April 2, 1861; Lieut.-Colonel May 27, 1866; Colonel April 2, 1872; Major-General July 1, 1882; Lieut.-General Dec. 20, 1886; and General April 1, 1894. He served as D.A.Q.M.G. of the Bellary Field Force, under Brigadier-Gen. Spottiswoode, from Nov. 8, 1858, to Jan. 21, 1859.

Major-Gen. Sir Robert Murdoch Smith, K.C.M.G., Colonel, retired list, R.E., director of the Edinburgh Museum of Science and Art, died on the 3rd inst. He was the son of Dr. Hugh Smith, of Kilmarnock, and was born in 1835. In 1855 he became a Lieut. in the Royal Engineers, and was promoted to be Captain in 1864, Major in 1873, Lieut.-Colonel in 1881, Colonel in 1885, and retired with the hon. rank of Major-General in 1887. He commanded a detachment of Engineers in Sir Charles Newton's archaeological expedition to Halicarnassus in 1856-59; conducted the exploration of Cyrenaica in 1860-61; commanded the Royal Engineers employed in Persia on the telegraph connecting England and India in 1863; and was director of the Persian telegraphs from 1865 to 1885. He had been director of the Edinburgh Museum of Science and Art since 1885. He was employed on a special diplomatic mission to Persia in 1887. In the following year he was created a K.C.M.G. He married, in 1869, Eleanor, daughter of Capt. J. R. Baker, R.N. She died in 1883.

Deputy Surg.-Gen. G. G. W. Maitland, retired list, Indian Medical Service, died at 5, Sion Place, Bath, on the 30th ult., aged 82.

Lieut.-Col. Benjamin George Humfrey, retired list, Indian Staff Corps, died at Paignton on the 27th ult. He joined the Army Nov. 6, 1863; became Lieut.-Colonel Nov. 6, 1889; and retired Nov. 9, 1891. He served in the Afghan campaign 1880 as Brigade-Major (medal).

Major Charles James Cockburn, 1st Batn. Royal Warwickshire Regiment, died on the 28th ult. Born Dec. 15, 1859, he joined the Royal Warwickshire Regiment as 2nd Lieut. May 11, 1878; became Lieut. July 7, 1880; Captain March 3, 1886; and Major Feb. 3, 1897. After passing the Staff College he was D.A.A.G. for Instruction, Malta, July, 1889, to Dec. 1894. He served in the Egyptian War, 1892, with the Reserve Depot at Alexandria; in the Sudan Expedition, 1884-85, attached to the 1st Batn. Royal Sussex Regiment (medal with clasp and bronze star); and in the Nile Expedition, 1898, including the battles of Atbara and Khartoum (medal and Egyptian medal with two clasps).

Major William Patchett, D.L., J.P., late 3rd Batn. Shropshire Light Infantry, died at Greenfields, Shrewsbury, on the 29th ult., age 77.

Major Arthur Harby, 1st Cinque Ports Volunteer Artillery, was killed by being thrown from his horse in camp at Sandwich, on the 3rd inst. Major Harby, who was clerk to the Dover borough and county justices, and held many local appointments, was an ardent Volunteer and sportsman, and captain of the Dover Rowing Club. At the inquest at Sandwich on Tuesday, a verdict of "accidental death" was returned.

Capt. Charles Mynors Piercy Hassall, 2nd Batn. Leicestershire Regiment, died at 4, Ras el Tin Hospital, Alexandria, on the 23rd ult., after a week's illness. Born Feb. 24, 1864, he joined the Leicestershire Regiment as Lieut. May 9, 1885. He was placed on half-pay for ill-health, Dec. 7, 1892, but rejoined for duty Feb. 19, 1896, and was promoted Captain, Nov. 6, 1897.

Capt. William Gordon Thomson, 1st Batn. Suffolk Regiment, died at Pretoria on the 9th ult. Born Oct. 10, 1865, son of the late Col. G. C. Thomson, 1st Bengal Cavalry, he joined the Suffolk Regiment as Lieut. May 9, 1885; became Captain Nov. 14, 1894; and was Adjutant Aug. 25, 1895, to Aug. 24, 1899. He was wounded and taken prisoner on the occasion of the disaster to the 1st Batn. at Rensburg on Jan. 6 last.

Capt. Edward Burt Grogan, 1st Batn. South Staffordshire Regiment, was killed at Ficksburg on the 25th ult. Born Nov. 1, 1864, son of the late Major-Gen. C. E. Grogan, he was appointed to the South Wales Borderers as Lieut. from the Militia May 14, 1884; was transferred to the South Staffordshire Regiment May 28, 1884; and became Captain Feb. 11, 1891.

Lieut. George Pritchard-Rayner, 49th Company Imperial Yeomanry, died of enteric at Bloemfontein on the 1st inst. He was the eldest son of the late Capt. George Pritchard-Rayner, 5th Dragoon Guards, of Trescaven, Anglesey. Born in 1872, he was a large landowner in Anglesey, and was unmarried. In 1895 he was appointed a J.P. for Anglesey. He was gazetted Lieut. in the Montgomeryshire Yeomanry in June, 1897, and his commission in the Imperial Yeomanry was dated Feb. 24 last.

Lieut. John Hunter, Volunteer Company, Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, died of enteric fever at Heilbron on the 30th ult. He obtained his Lieut.'s commission in the 4th (Stirlingshire) Volunteer Batn. in 1898, and was gazetted a temporary Lieut. in the Army on Feb. 24 last.

2nd Lieut. Grafton Lloyd Dulany Brancker, 1st Batn. South Staffordshire Regiment, was killed in action at Ficksburg on the 25th ult. Born Dec. 23, 1876, he was appointed to the South Staffordshire Regiment from the 4th (Militia) Batn., Dec. 20, 1899.

Mr. Thomas Mervyn Wyatt, Assistant-Chemist, War Department, and Lecturer in Chemistry, Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, died at Woolwich on the 2nd inst., aged 31.

THE VOLUNTEERS.—The official returns of the Volunteer force for the year ending October 31, 1899, have been issued from the War Office. The enrolled strength at the end of that period was 229,854, or 33,562 less than the authorised establishment of 263,416. The enrolled total was 824 less than in the preceding year, and 6,205 less than in 1895-96, when the force attained a total of 236,059, the highest point ever reached till now, when there is reason to believe that the impetus given to volunteering by the war since the current year began will make the next returns exceed all that have been hitherto attained. The total of efficient for last year was 223,921, or 97.41 of the enrolled strength, the highest proportion since 1886, when 97.51 was reached; and 196,756, or 85.6 per cent. of those enrolled, were present at last year's inspections. A total of 20,114 officers and sergeants (the largest total till now) had qualified as proficient; 1,816 officers (again the highest return) had passed in tactics or artillery; and 19 officers and 18 non-commissioned officers had passed in signalling and 14 and 21 in supply duties. The state of the force by arms at the beginning of the current year was:—Light Horse, 180 efficient out of 200 enrolled; Artillery, 40,757 efficient out of 41,966; Engineers (Railway and Fortress), 11,303 efficient out of 11,762; Submarine Miners, 1,201 efficient out of 1,273; Infantry, 169,069 efficient out of 173,214; and Medical Staff Corps, 1,411 efficient out of 1,439. The total number of efficient officers in the force was 8,020. The artillery returns include 99 position batteries and 392 garrison companies; and the infantry 346 mounted infantry, 3,473 cyclists, and 26 machine guns. The Honourable Artillery Company returned 536 efficient out of 548 enrolled.

ABERDEEN GRANITE MONUMENTS, &c.—ALEX MACDONALD and Co., Limited (late A. Macdonald, Field and Co.), Workers in Polished Granites to the Queen, undertake the erection of their work in any part of the country. The largest stock of granite monuments in the country may be seen at their London premises. THE SIEGES IN SOUTH AFRICA.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—It is to be hoped that a grateful country will give some acknowledgment in return to the men who have upheld the honour of the British flag throughout those months of terrible privation in the sieges of the war. Their sufferings will leave a life-long mark on many who have been engaged in them. England could not do better than follow Russia's lead after the siege of Sebastopol, when officers and men were allowed to reckon each month's siege as a year towards service. Some such consideration given to our officers and men would be sure to meet with general approval, and be some acknowledgment from a grateful country for what they have endured in upholding its honour and glory.

OBSERVER.

KORN SPRUIT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—May I draw your attention to a slight inaccuracy in your notes on the honours lately bestowed on "Q" Battery R.H.A. for the Korn Spruit affair? You say "there were only two officers who took part in the work of saving the guns." There were only two officers belonging to the battery but there were three other officers belonging to the 2nd Batn. Durham L.I. contingent of the Burma Mounted Infantry, who took their full share of saving the guns under that hell of fire, one of their number being killed while so doing. To whom the honour of saving those guns was mainly due, no one knows better than the gallant officer in command of "Q" Battery at the time, and now, when all honour, glory, and well-deserved reward has been heaped on "Q" Battery itself, is it fair that those others whose gallant action turned the scale should be passed over in a silence which is inexplicable to those who know?

JUSTICE.

THE three new forts which have been in course of construction for the last two years upon the cliffs overlooking the Channel at Dover have now been formally handed over by the contractors on their completion. The 6in. guns which recently arrived at Dover have been mounted at these forts, and arrangements are now being made for mounting six 9in. guns which have been manufactured at Woolwich. These guns, like the 6in. ones, are wire-built breech-loaders.

ROYAL CAMBRIDGE ASYLUM.—This is the only asylum which exists for the benefit of the soldier's widow, who receives no pension or allowance from Government; at present it shelters 64 widows, seven having just been added out of 48 selected candidates. Last July the Princess Mary ward was opened by the Duchess of York, in memory of the late Duchess of Teck, and the additional accommodation thus provided has been much appreciated. As some of the inmates could be better provided for by being transferred to the care of their friends or special institutions, the committee has asked and obtained power to grant out-pensions in future. The committee express regret at the loss by death of many old supporters. The income last year was £23,769, and the expenditure £23,840. This institution is so admirably managed that it ought to receive the best support. Already the Army plays its part admirably in supplying funds.

2nd Lieut. E. D. Carr-Harris at S.M.E., Chatham, ordered to Wei-hai-Wei.

Lieut. H. L. Bingay at S.M.E., Chatham, ordered to Hong Kong.

Twenty-eight officers have been requisitioned from home this year for service in India.

A draft is being selected at Chatham for Hong Kong. It will consist of three sergeants and 32 sappers, who will be under the command of 2nd Lieut. Cargill. Another draft, which is to comprise nine sergeants and corporals and 37 sappers, is to be prepared for service at Wei-hai-wei. Both parties will embark next week in the P. and O. steamer Victoria, at the Royal Albert Docks.

Lieut. Russell-Brown is on passage home from South Africa in the Kildonan Castle, invalided.

INFANTRY.

Grenadier Guards.—Lieut. Morrison, who has been on special service in South Africa, and lately returned home invalided, has been accepted as the Unionist candidate for South Wilts in place of Lord Folkestone.

Scots Guards.—We regret to learn that Lieut.-Col. the Hon. North Dalrymple-Hamilton, 3rd Batn., has had to undergo a re-amputation of his arm. Mr. Frederick Treves performed the operation on Saturday last. Col. Hamilton's general condition is good, but the unsatisfactory state of the limb remains unchanged.

Irish Guards.—Lieut. Oxmantown is on passage home from the Cape with invalids in the Kildonan Castle.

Royal Scots (1st).—Brevet-Major (Lieut.-Col.) Carter, C.M.G., has been invalided home from the Gold Coast, and is on passage in the Jebba. Lieut. Collingridge, 3rd (Militia) Batn., is on passage home from South Africa in the Kildonan Castle, invalided.

Buffs (3rd).—Lieut. and Qrmr. Comber, 3rd Batn., has arrived at the Cape from India to join on transfer from the 1st Batn.

Lincolnshire Regiment (10th).—The 1st V.B. has been broken up into two battalions, to be officially designated the 1st and 3rd V.B.'s. Major Lowe, 3rd (Militia) Batn., has been appointed Staff Captain, Perham Down Camp and Salisbury, and also performs the duties of musketry commandant. 2nd Lieut. Johnson, 2nd Batn., is on passage home from South Africa in the Kildonan Castle, invalided.

Suffolk Regiment (12th).—Capt. Murphy, 1st Batn., has arrived at the Cape from India to join headquarters on promotion from the 2nd Batn. Lieut. Halhed, attached to the 1st Batn. from 3rd Batn., is on passage home from South Africa in the Kildonan Castle, invalided.

Bedfordshire Regiment (16th).—Capt. Lightfoot, 2nd Batn., is en route to England from the Cape, invalided, in the Kildonan Castle.

Royal Irish Regiment (18th).—Lieut. Boyse, 1st Batn., is invalided from South Africa; he is on passage home in the Kildonan Castle, which left Cape Town on the 23rd ult.

Royal Scots Fusiliers (21st).—Brevet-Major Scudamore, D.S.O., is on passage home from the Cape in the Kildonan Castle, which sailed on the 23rd ult. Capt. Trenchard, 2nd Batn., has arrived at the Cape from India to join headquarters on promotion from the 1st Batn.

South Wales Borderers (24th).—Capt. Gray, 2nd Batn., has arrived at the Cape from India to join headquarters on promotion from the 1st Batn.

King's Own Scottish Borderers (25th).—Capt. Wilkie, 3rd (Militia) Batn., is on passage home from Cape Town in the Pindari, which sailed on the 28th ult., with invalids.

Gloucestershire Regiment (28th).—Approval has been given for the formation of a new Volunteer battalion at Bristol to be designated the 3rd V.B.

Worcestershire Regiment (29th).—A military correspondence writing in the Globe says:—

"I have seen it stated that the colours of the 44th Regiment are about the oldest now on active service. This is not quite correct. There are several sets of colours still carried which were presented before 1860, when, I believe, those of the 44th were taken into use. The 45th still carry colours which were taken into use, I believe, in 1839; while the 29th carry a set which they bore in the Punjab Campaign over half a century ago."

Lieuts. Winnington and Pardoe—the latter of the Volunteer Company—have been invalided from South Africa, and are on passage home in the Kildonan Castle.

East Lancashire Regiment (30th).—2nd Lieut. Preston, 3rd (Militia) Batn., has been invalided from the Cape, and is on passage home in the Kildonan Castle.

South Staffordshire Regiment (38th).—Capt. Smith, 4th (Militia) Batn., is on passage home from South Africa in the Kildonan Castle, invalided.

South Lancashire Regiment (40th).—Major Heath, 3rd (Militia) Batn., is on passage home from South Africa in the Kildonan Castle, invalided.

Oxfordshire Light Infantry (43rd).—Lieuts. Bayley and Wood are on passage home from South Africa in the Kildonan Castle, invalided. Capt. Paske, 3rd (Militia) Batn., is a passenger in the same vessel.

Sherwood Foresters (45th).—2nd Lieut. Manby is on passage home from the Cape in the Kildonan Castle, invalided.

Loyal North Lancashire Regiment (47th).—Lieut. Wallace sailed from Cape Town for England on the 26th ult., in charge of invalids in the Monteagle.

Oxfordshire Light Infantry (52nd).—A monument erected by the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men, in memory of their comrades who died between August, 1897, and Nov. 4, 1898, in the North-West Frontier of India campaign and elsewhere was unveiled on the 29th ult. by Miss Morrell, daughter of the Mayor of Oxford. The monument stands near the centre of the city on the site given by the corporation, which was formerly occupied by St. Peter le Bailey Church. It is of Bath stone, 25ft. in height, and the names of about 70 officers and men are carved on three sides of the pedestal. A guard of honour of 50 men from the depot at Cowley, with Col. Strachan, the commanding officer, was present at the ceremony.

Northamptonshire Regiment (58th).—Lieut. Wyndowe is on passage home from South Africa in the Kildonan Castle, invalided.

King's Royal Rifles (60th).—The takings of the 60th Rifles Stall at the Naval and Military Bazaar, of which Princess Christian was the president, were nearly £2,000, which included a gift of £1,000 by Sir Frederick Wills.

Gloucestershire Regiment (61st).—Lieut. Grimley is on passage home from the Cape, invalided, in the Kildonan Castle.

Gordon Highlanders (75th).—In a letter to the Gordon Post, published on Tuesday, Mr. Winston Churchill pays a high tribute to the fighting qualities of the battalion in the battle before Johannesburg, in which the Gordons and "C.I.V.'s" led the attack. After speaking highly of the dash and gallantry of the "C.I.V.'s," Mr. Churchill says:—

"The leading battalion of 19th Brigade chanced—for there was no selection—to be the Gordon Highlanders; nor was it without a thrill that I watched this famous regiment move against the enemy. Their extension and advance were conducted with machine-like regularity. The officers explained what was required to the men. They were to advance rapidly until under rifle fire, and then to push on or not as they might be instructed. With impassive unconcern the veterans of Chitral, Dargai, the Bara Valley, Magersfontein, Paardeberg, and Houtnek walked leisurely forward in the event to be the very heart of the enemy's position. The grass in front of them was burnt and burning, and against this dark background the khaki figures showed distinctly. The Dutch held their fire until the attack was within 800 yards, and then, louder than the cannonade, the ominous rattle of concentrated rifle fire burst forth. The black slope was spotted as thickly with grey puffs of dust where the bullets struck as with advancing soldiers, and tiny figures falling by the way told of heavy loss. But the advance neither checked nor quickened. With remorseless stride, undisturbed by peril or enthusiasm, the Gordons swept steadily onward, changed direction half left to avoid, as far as possible, enfilade fire, charged again to the right to effect a lodgment on the end of the ridge most suitable to attack, and at last rose up together to charge. The black slope twinkled like jet with the unexpected glitter of bayonets. The rugged sky-line bristled with killed figures, as, in perfect discipline and disdainful silence those splendid soldiers closed on their foe. The Boers shrank from the contact. Discharging their magazines furiously and firing their guns twice at point-blank range, they fled in confusion to the main ridge, and the issue of the action was no longer undecided. The general at the finish rode forward to find the Gordons massed among the rocks they had won. The gallant Burney, who commanded the firing line, was severely wounded. St. John Meyrick was killed. Nine officers and 88 soldiers had fallen in the attack; but those that remained were proud and happy in the knowledge that they had added to the many feats of arms which adorn the annals of the regiment, one that was at least the equal of Elands Laagte or Dargai, and besides all this, they may have reflected that by their devotion they had carried forward the British cause a long stride to victory and, better far than victory, to peace. Ian Hamilton spoke a few brief words of thanks to them—'the regiment my father commanded and I was born in'—and told them that in a few hours all Scotland would ring with the tale of their deeds. And well Scotland may, for no men of any race could have shown more soldierlike behaviour."

The next profit of the Gordon Highlanders' stall at the Royal Naval and Military Bazaar was £483 17s. 8d. This sum was exceeded by only one other stall.

Cameron Highlanders (79th).—Lieut. the Hon. R. A. Campbell is returning home from South Africa with Lieut.-Gen. Sir Henry Colville, to whom he has been Aide-de-Camp.

Royal Irish Rifles (86th).—Capt. Baker has arrived at the Cape from India to join headquarters on promotion from the 1st Batn. (83rd).

Connaught Rangers (88th).—2nd Lieut. Payne sailed from Cape Town for England in the Monteagle on the 26th ult., invalided.

Derbyshire Regiment (95th).—Capt. Iggulden, on appointment as D.A.A.G. on the Bengal Establishment, has been posted to the Presidency District.

Manchester Regiment (96th).—Major Anderson is en route to England from the Cape in the Kildonan Castle, invalided.

Royal Munster Fusiliers (101st).—Lieut.-Col. Lucas 3rd (Militia) Batn., is on passage home from the Cape in charge of invalids in the Pindari, which sailed on the 28th ult. Lieut. Pakenham is also a passenger on the Kildonan Castle.

Royal Sussex Regiment (107th).—Lieut. Gem is appointed Assistant Superintendent of Army Signalling, Malakand Force.

Rifle Brigade.—Capt. Mitchell, 6th (Militia) Batn., has been selected for special service with the Kumasi Expedition.

Army Service Corps.—Capt. Master is prisoner of war, having been captured at Heilbron on Saturday last. 2nd Lieut. Beddy is on passage home from the Cape in the Kildonan Castle, invalided.

Royal Army Medical Corps.—Instructions have been issued for providing by the Military Works Department, either by building or hiring, messes for officers in India. Such mess accommodation will be in lieu of mess allowances. Major Whaite, Capt. Dalton, and Lieut. Cuddon-Fletcher is on passage home from South Africa in the Kildonan Castle, invalided.

Army Chaplain's Department.—The Army chaplains do their work so quietly and unostentatiously that we are the more pleased to find Mr. Donald Macdonald, the war correspondent of the Melbourne Argus, who has been invalided from the front, paying so high a tribute to their gallantry. Speaking at a welcome home given to him in Melbourne, Mr. Macdonald said:—

"Of the work on the battlefield which came under my attention, I think that of the chaplains was the noblest and perhaps the hardest. A man lay wounded on the ground. The doctors came along, and a rapid glance told them they could do nothing for him. They passed on. Then the chaplain would come to his side, perhaps lie down on the ground beside him. You would see a shock pass over the dying man's face, for he knew what it meant; but any one who has seen a battlefield and its wounded knows that the chaplain's act in kneeling there is the greatest kindness that can be paid to a dying man, as it is certainly the hardest that any man can be asked to do. Very often the chaplains remained out on the battlefield all night, and came in the whitest and most exhausted men of all the workers."

"TROPON" has proved an absolute boon to officers doing duty in South Africa, if we may judge by what is said by those who have tried it. The great merit of this preparation consists in its being natural albumen, extracted from meat and vegetables. It is absolutely free from any indigestible substances. An officer who was going to the front with the Imperial Yeomanry tried it before starting and was so satisfied with results that he decided to order a big case of it for his own personal use, arranging to have the supply kept up from time to time. He writes from the scene of operations to say that he has been more than satisfied. Not only has it kept him fit, but "it has proved invaluable in the case of men who have shown signs of collapse after a trying march or fatiguing turn of outpost duty." In his battalion, he goes on to say, "Tropon stands high in the estimation of all. It is just what is wanted on field service, for it is easily carried, and contains the nourishment which is most necessary to keep a man in good condition in face of great hardships."

The widows and children of sergeant-majors of embodied Militia killed in action, or of dying of wounds received in action, or of illness directly traceable to active operations in the field, will be entitled to pensions or gratuities from Army funds, at the same rates and under the same conditions as warrant officers of the Regular forces.

Reviews.

THE MAGAZINES.

The Nineteenth Century is altogether a very interesting number. In addition to its proposal for the formation of a kind of vigilance committee to see that the Government deals aright with the lessons of the South African war, it touches the interests both of that country and of China, and deals with the occupations of our military officers at home. A deplorable picture is presented by Mr. Henry Norman of our vacillation in China. He looks in vain for any indications of a policy on our part, and goes so far as to say that the present humiliation, the loss and the possible horrors, lie chiefly at the door of England. There are some people, it may be remarked, who hold with equal plausibility that they lie at the door of Russia. Mr. Norman himself insists at length upon the unwarrantable advance of Russia and her deliberate infraction of old-standing treaty rights. He condemns our occupation of Wei-hai-Wei, though at the present moment that port has proved its value in a way that few people expected. According to Mr. Norman the situation two years ago was that the policy imperatively required by British interests in China was hopelessly beaten and driven from the field, but he still insists that China must be ruled through the Chinese, that the whole of the country must be thrown open to foreign trade, and, in short, that our old policy should be maintained, though brought under the care of a kind of condominium of the Powers. Japan, says Mr. Norman, is now face to face with a life-and-death struggle, and if she is to strike at all she must strike within six months. For the rest, he concludes that we want a policy and a determination to carry it out. Col. J. G. B. Stopford discusses the question of the soldier settler in South Africa, and points out most reasonably that the problem is not so simple as some suppose. Men from a populated country do not easily habituate themselves to settled life on the veldt, and the want of water is a serious hindrance to agricultural progress. Col. Stopford throws out some suggestions in regard to irrigation. To an article by Col. Lonsdale Hale on "Generals at Home and their work in the Coming Autumn" we hope to refer to elsewhere. He is well pleased with the purposes of the War Office, but is of opinion that a great deal of hard work is required to give them effect. The question of administrative reform in the public service finds scope for the pen of Mr. P. Lyttelton Gell, who thinks that we have missed the highest quality available, though a larger business element might have been introduced, but that we do not enlist enough of the requisite force, and that there is a tendency in the Government offices to become stereotyped. The Nineteenth Century has also articles upon the National Gallery, "By-ways in Rural Ireland," and a number of other interesting subjects.

In these stirring days the opening article of our old friend "Maga" might even seem a little out of date. "The Morocco Scare," concerning which Mr. Walter B. Harris writes, is almost obliterated in the lurid light of China, but it is very useful to find in the pages of Blackwood a reasonable statement that the French did not invade Morocco, that the country is not disturbed, and that a "holy war" has not been proclaimed. Generations have awaited the collapse of Morocco, and possibly that state may outlast generations yet unborn. In any case, Mr. Harris says that the French are in their right in regard to the oases of Tuat, which are in every way part and parcel of the hinterland of Algeria, and is perfectly content that they, who have done so much to improve the conditions of life in the Sahara, should possess that region. The magazine also contains a defence of "Our Officers." The system may not be perfect, but the country should congratulate itself on having a class of servants who have no superiors in the world. It would be ridiculous to suppose that things should never go wrong, but the writer in Blackwood contends that there has not been any want of capacity among the officers of the British Army. It is they who have formed, trained and disciplined the fighting units to which they belong, while the general staff has accomplished one of the most marvellous feats in military history. It is quite clear that under the present system the British officer cannot be "the fool of the family," though, as Blackwood says, one must search through many excellent horsemen before a first-class jockey can be discovered. Not all our generals can be expected to prove Wellingtons, but at least it is certain that the class of officers from which they rise is formed of Englishmen who are ready to submit to any trials and to go through any training that may fit them to follow the path of duty which they have chosen, and "no one has dared to gainsay their magnificent pluck, determination, and endurance." An interesting South African article by "Linesman" is devoted to certain incidents in Natal. The military critic whose caustic pen has had so many hard things to write is now in a happier mood. He has praise for the sound strategy that led us on to Germiston as the central point of the railway system instead of direct to Johannesburg or Pretoria, and he draws particular attention to the military instinct of the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa which divined what the enemy expected him to do, and to the legitimate use of mounted infantry, and the magnificent marching powers of our troops. Great praise is given to Sir Redvers Buller for his application of tactics to the enemy's habits of thought, and to the characteristics of the ground.

In the United Service Magazine Lieut.-Col. Maude continues his "Notes on the Evolution of Cavalry," and a writer, who will be recognised under the initials of "C. E. D. P. B.," gives a brief statistical account of the French Army to-day, which should be very useful. A most excellent article is by Major-Gen. Charles H. Owen, on the employment of artillery in South Africa. He shows very clearly that the whole question has been misunderstood by certain writers, and he is perfectly right in saying that our horse and field batteries, handicapped as they have been by the use of only one projectile, have been very efficiently handled, have made excellent practice, and have done great service. If they have been outranged, it has not been by field guns, and the authorities, says Gen. Owen, appear to have forgotten that it was necessary to provide such pieces as position ordnance for a campaign in the field. Yet it was perfectly clear that the Boers might have been expected to bring down these guns into Natal. Gen. Owen's conclusions are irrefragable, and he urges that our new experience should help us to ascertain what are the best pieces, carriages, and ammunition of each class, but that attempts at improvement must not be confined to field artillery. Particular attention is drawn to an article by "An Outsider" on "The Staff of the British Army." The Outsider does not by any means share the opinions of the writer in Blackwood, and his argument is that the beginning, the middle, and end of the whole matter is the bad system under which the staff of the British Army is at present selected. "Very many of our staff officers are hopelessly incompetent," but the illustrations given are not convincing, and we are under the impression that the argument has recently been put in the same form in some other place. The idea of the Outsider is that the competitive system excludes many good men, that a system of entrance by seniority of qualifications would be preferable, and that the examination should be confined to subjects having a direct bearing upon efficiency in the field. Sir John Colomb handles his familiar subject of the marines and the coaling stations, but his article is in the nature of a reply to Capt. W. Baker Brown, R.E. The soundest views are expressed in relation to naval supremacy, and Sir John Colomb explains that it is because he wishes to put a stop to the present reckless expenditure of men and money on exaggerated local defences of naval ports that he advocates the custody of those which are purely and simply naval being transferred to the Admiralty, and it appears that his argument for the substitution of marines for military forces in such places is only a minor incident of the change he advocates. He believes that a sweeping reduction in the department of the Inspector-General of Fortifications at the War Office could be made. We have already expressed our views in relation to the marines and the coaling-station on several occasions. While Sir John Colomb is replying to Major Baker Brown that officer replies in the same number to "Common-sense," who lately made a very serious attack on the corps of Royal Engineers, with arguments which, no doubt, were somewhat reckless. There is an article also by Lieut.-Col. G. F. White on "Espanero." Altogether the number is full of interest.

We have received the National Review, in which Mr. Oman makes an excellent plea for military history, while Major M. F. Gage describes a most interesting trip from Uganda to Khartoum, and Mr. C. G. Colton urges us to draw a lesson from the Swiss Army. There is also a supplement which contains an interesting "Story of the Boer War" by Mr. H. W. Wilson. Space fails us to deal, as we should like, with Macmillan's Magazine, in which Capt. Cairns concludes his account of the campaign of Douai; or with Longman's Magazine, the Cornhill, the Humane Review, and the Humanitarian.

We should have liked also to say something about the Illustrated Magazine. The Pall Mall is good and informed with a good deal of phantasy, and yet with a number of practical articles. One contribution is upon the "Military Traditions of the City of London." The Century Magazine is admirable in its illustrations throughout, and is good in its literary contributions. The same may be said of Harper's Magazine, in which there are articles descriptive of service inside the Boer lines, and of the work of war correspondents in South Africa. The Badminton Magazine is a good number.

VETERANS OF THE NAVAL SERVICE.

WHILE France lost some months ago that ancient veteran of her Navy, Admiral de Ponques d'Herbighem, and recently, in the person of the Prince de Joinville, one of her most valued naval officers, and a man whom all men admired, Sir Harry Keppel, the veteran of our own Navy, is still happily with us, having lately entered upon his ninety-second year; and at this time, when we are once more engaged with the Chinese, his famous service in the destruction of the great flotilla of junks in the Fatsan creek in 1857 is brought again to the public mind. In the genial personalities of the Prince de Joinville and Sir Harry Keppel there was much in common. The gallant Admiral of the Fleet was by many years the senior of the Prince whom he survives, for he was born on June 14, 1809, and in his "Life under Four Sovereigns" has told the story of how, three weeks later, he occupied his coffin, and was about to be consigned to the back garden, being considered unworthy of consecrated ground, when the old nurse, fancying there might yet be life in "the small thing," rescued him from premature burial to become an ornament of the British Navy.

The Prince was not born until 1818, and saw the light at Neuilly, being the youngest son of Louis Philippe. His Vieux Souvenirs give a delightful picture of his early life, and he tells, in a charming manner, how he was led to the sea. Among his father's aides-de-camp was the Comte d'Houdetot, who had begun life as a midshipman and had been at the battle of Trafalgar in the Algésiras, flagship of Admiral Magon, his uncle, whom he saw shot as he himself lay with both legs broken by the bursting of a shell. To the circle at Neuilly came also Admiral Villametz, and the old flag officer, who had been with D'Entrecasteaux in the search for La Pérouse, used to exchange experiences with the quondam midshipman. Their stories fascinated the boy, and settled his future career. He entered the Navy after undergoing an examination before a board of officers at Brest, and his first service was in the Syrène frigate, and he was afterwards in the Didon and the Iphigénie with Captain de Parseval, who had been in command of the mizentop of the Bucanure at Trafalgar when the Victory passed under her stern. Thus did De Joinville gather his impressions of the naval service. In later life he was always popular, and the French bluejackets called him Prince Poule-au-Pot, partly because of his care for their inner welfare, and partly, it would appear, because of his pronounced Bourbon nose. That the Prince was a gallant officer everyone knew, for had he not at Vera Cruz, in 1838, seized his adversary, General Arista, with his own hand? The most remarkable episode in his career was, however, in 1840, when the "Roi Bourgeois" sent him in the Belle Poule to bring back from St. Helena the ashes of the great Napoleon, which now repose beneath the dome of the Invalides. The Revolution of 1848 brought him as an exile to England, and he did not see France again for twenty-two years, when he found it distracted by the horrors of the Commune; but his sword was ready for its service, and he discovered a way, as "Colonel Lutherod," of fighting against the enemies of his country.

It is pleasant to record the services of an officer who had many friends in this country, and among them Sir Harry Keppel. That veteran officer had seen much service before the memorable business of the Fatsan Creek. He had been employed on the coast of Spain during the Carlist War of 1834-36, and, in command of the Dido, he had served through the China War of 1841-42, including the capture of Woosung and Shanghai, and the operations in the Yang-tse-Kiang. He served on the coast of Borneo, and on the China, Australia, and Pacific stations. In the Russian War he was in command of the St. Jean d'Acre in the Baltic, and, proceeding to the Black Sea, landed with the Naval Brigade in the Crimea, and greatly distinguished himself. Then came the service in China again, and the engagement of Fatsan, when his galley sank under him, and five out of his crew of six were killed and wounded. Long may Sir Harry Keppel continue to enjoy good health, and to live as an ornament of the naval service which he has loved so much!

NAVAL TRAINING.

THE discussion upon Mr. Thursfield's important paper was resumed last week too late for us to comment upon it. In one respect the proceedings were a surprise, because, whereas at the first meeting the advocates of the status quo were apparently in a majority, this state of things seems to have been reversed on the latter occasion. Mr. Thursfield has thus by his address produced a very strong body of evidence demonstrating that, as Mr. Goschen stated the other day, "a profound division of opinion" exists in the Navy upon this question. We cannot accept the testimony of Commander Nicholson that he represents the majority of his contemporaries in the Navy without supporting evidence which is not yet forthcoming. Indeed, on the contrary, it seems more likely that there is but a small margin, if any, between the numbers espousing either side in the controversy. The two most important speakers on this occasion were Sir Frederick Richards and Sir Anthony Hoskins, the latter presiding at the meeting. Both of those officers, as well as a number of others, spoke strongly in favour of the training given in the masted squadron, and the late First Sea Lord pointedly referred to the temporary disappearance of this squadron. Other distinguished flag-officers, like Sir Edmund Fremantle and Admiral Le Hunte Ward, expressed their belief that the attempt to resuscitate a thing dead and buried as mast and sail training had been, was much like flogging a dead horse. It is noteworthy, and as significant as it is unusual, that a number of officers from the junior grades of commander and lieutenant were present and spoke. Without exception, too, those who spoke advocated the old system of training. That it should be so is the more curious, seeing that it is not likely that many officers of these grades can have participated in that training themselves.

This discussion has shown that on certain points opinion is as unanimous as on others it is divergent. All are agreed that the old system of training with masts and sails produced in our seamen just those qualities which were necessary for his efficiency. The duties aloft, on the bridge, at the conn, the helm, and in the chains, required and created quickness of eye and hand, nerve, self-reliance and resource, readiness in emergencies, and a hearty sense of comradeship. The profession is unanimous also that the system of training which for the last five-and-twenty years has superseded the former, and which may be described as a bastard sea training, has absolutely failed in its purpose. The unanimity with which one speaker after another pointed out that the present system, by which is meant, of course, the system which included the small training squadron of masted vessels, has given anything but satisfactory results, was most striking and somewhat startling. It must have come as a shock to those who, like Sir Gerard Noel, have believed in its efficacy. One after the other the admirals who have lately commanded our fleets, or who are now in commands at home, testified to the need for some training which will restore to us the type of officer and seaman which they affirm to be disappearing. It is not less remarkable that with few exceptions these officers are as fully assured in their own minds that no mere resuscitation of a training ship squadron of four masted vessels would remedy the evil. Some of the thick and thin advocates of spar and sail drill are apparently of the same opinion; at least, Sir Gerard Noel speaks of a considerably larger number of vessels as needed for the purpose of giving the training which he advocates. After the exhibition of divided opinion and counsel which has been brought forth by Mr. Thursfield's admirable paper, there cannot be any doubt but that the Admiralty must bestir itself in the matter. An inquiry into the subject of naval training must take place without delay.

In regard to this enquiry the best plan would be to place on the committee of investigation equal numbers of those officers known to be advocates of the spar and sail system, and of those who are opposed to it. Such a committee might comprise Sir Frederick Richards, Sir Gerard Noel, Sir Anthony Hoskins, and Sir Cyprian Bridge, on the one side, with Sir Michael Culme Seymour, Sir John Hopkins, Sir Nathaniel Bowden-Smith, and Sir Edmund Fremantle on the other. If the deliberations of these eight officers were presided over by some gentleman whose position would insure his impartiality, judgment, and experience as an educationalist in the widest sense, we believe that there should be no reason whatever why we should not get a report of the greatest value, and recommendations which should give us the best possible system of training for both officers and men. Of one thing we may be certain, there is agreement upon the point so clearly put by Mr. Thursfield that the best system, and therefore the only one worth looking for, is one which will train seamen to the conditions in which they will have to fight, including the first and most vital of those conditions—the sea itself.

Navy Notes.

The crisis in the Far East becomes more acute with every passing day. Never perhaps have Europeans of all nationalities combined been placed in a more appalling position. The question of the moment is, are the Powers working in accord? Unfortunately, signs are present that the condition of the European Concert is something of an altogether different nature. Had there been the harmony we hear about how is it that Peking was not relieved a week ago? Why is it that Japan, which has voted her money and mobilised her men, remains inactive? She is nearest the scene of conflict, she is prepared for war, and she has been willing to undertake an advance on Peking. Why, then, was she not told to move days ago? If the telegrams from Berlin are to be believed, the obstacle to Japanese action has been the disapproval of the Russian Government. And if this be true the women and children, the diplomatists and their staffs, and the other Europeans in the Chinese capital are to be sacrificed to Manchu barbarism and done to death before the arrival of British reinforcements. It is a curious commentary on the so-called harmony of the Powers.

Although the mobilisation does not take place until Tuesday next, instructions have been issued for officers appointed to Coastguard and Port-guard ships, and torpedo-boats to join their vessels this week. From the number of pennants to be hoisted it is evident that there is to be no falling off in the importance of this year's manoeuvres, nor is it likely that the plan of operations will be otherwise than interesting and instructive. The following are the ships to be specially commissioned:—At Portsmouth: the Ariadne, by Capt. John Denison; the Brilliant, Capt. Charles H. Robertson; the Gibraltar, Capt. Charles E. Kingsmill; the Gladiator, Capt. John Cament; the Hecla, Commander James de C. Hamilton (in command); the Hero, Capt. Casper J. Baker; the Naiad, Capt. Robert H. S. Stokes; and the Sultan, Capt. the Hon. Alexander E. Bethell. At Devonport: the Andromache, by Capt. Sackville H. Carden; the Apollo, Capt. George E. Patey; the Blake, Capt. Robert S. Sparks; the Conqueror, Capt. Frederick S. Pelham; the Edgar, Capt. Ernest J. Fleet; the Phæbe, Commander Reginald B. Colmore (in command); the Rainbow, Capt. Colmar R. Keppel; the Retribution, Capt. William W. Hewett; the Sirius, Capt. Richard B. Farquhar; and the Talbot, Capt. Charles H. Coke. At Chatham: the Blenheim, by Capt. Peyton Hoskyns; the Dreadnought, Capt. Horatio N. Dudding; the Hawke, Capt. Cecil Burney; the Immortalité, Capt. Arthur A. Galloway; the Mersey, Capt. Morris H. Smyth; the Perseus, Commander Henry J. Laxton (in command); the Pioneer, Commander Robert H. Travers (in command); the Prometheus, Commander Ernest Troubridge (in command); and the Superb, Capt. Henry Leah.

The torpedo-boats to commission for the manoeuvres are twenty-four in number. Each of the three flotillas will be commanded by a Lieut.-Commander. There will also be a second boat in each flotilla, carrying a Lieutenant, the remaining boats being commanded by Acting Sub-Lieutenants. Lieut.-Commander Stanley C. U. V. Portmouth in No. 81 will have command of the Portsmouth flotilla, the other boats of that flotilla being No. 82, Lieut.-Commander Stanley L. Willis; No. 77, Acting Sub-Lieut. C. V. Osborne; No. 76, Acting Sub-Lieut. F. B. Favell; No. 71, Acting Sub-Lieut. G. L. Saurin; No. 66, Acting Sub-Lieut. C. H. Davey; No. 59, Acting Sub-Lieut. G. Johnstone; No. 50, Acting Sub-

Lieut. S. W. Green; No. 49, Acting Sub-Lieut. R. Kenyon; No. 42, Acting Sub-Lieut. E. A. D. Masterman; No. 83, Acting Sub-Lieut. J. L. Forbes; No. 84, Acting Sub-Lieut. C. Ennals. The Devonport flotilla will be commanded by Lieut.-Commander R. H. Walters in No. 85, with the following boats:—No. 86, Lieut.-Commander R. H. Mahon; No. 58, Acting Sub-Lieut. A. Gilbert; No. 57, Acting Sub-Lieut. C. Maitland-Addison; No. 55, Acting Sub-Lieut. R. Ayleen; No. 53, Acting Sub-Lieut. V. Gascoigne; No. 52, Acting Sub-Lieut. V. Rashleigh; No. 45, Acting Sub-Lieut. G. Parnell. The Chatham flotilla is the smallest, consisting of but four boats under the command of Lieut.-Commander Frederick S. Litchfield in No. 74. The other boats are No. 68, Lieut.-Commander W. L. Elder; No. 64, Acting Sub-Lieut. R. Groves, and No. 63, Acting Sub-Lieut. H. B. Bedwell.

Among other impending appointments in connection with the manoeuvres we find Lieut. Arthur A. M. Duff selected as Flag-Lieut. to Rear-Admiral Sir Gerard H. U. Noel, and Lieut. Andrew W. Kerr as Flag-Lieut. to Rear-Admiral James L. Hammet. The following have been appointed additional as Intelligence Officers:—Captain (retired) William D. Morrish to Thunderer, Pembroke; Captain (retired) Powell C. Underwood to Melampus, Kingstown; Captain (retired) Henry W. A. Littledale to Eagle, Liverpool; Commander (retired) Robert T. Wood to Benbow, Greenock; Commander (retired) Ronald R. M. Hall to Howe, Queenstown; Commander (retired) Hon. Francis Spring-Rice to Collingwood, Castletown. Fleet Paymaster Richard B. White has been appointed secretary to Rear-Admiral James L. Hammet, and the following retired officers have been appointed additional to the ships named as coaling officers:—Commander Richard W. Watt, Majestic; Commander Arthur R. F. Bailey, Prince George; Commander Herbert B. Dillon, Sans Pareil; Lieut. William H. Callwell, Alexandra.

The claims of the chief petty officers for increased pensions are again to the fore in the memorial dated the 27th ult., signed by sixteen Members of Parliament, and forwarded to the First Lord. If the suggestion therein were acted upon it would only still further increase the anomalies arising from the present modes of granting pensions to the lower deck, in that the effect would be to still further increase the number of men who practically are pensioned on full pay after twenty years' service. At present the highest pension granted to the lower deck is three shillings per day. This is granted both to the lowest and highest paid petty officer. The plan now advocated would pension some chief petty officers of the seaman class on practically full pay.

In the Civil Service every one knows that for each year's service he will receive one sixtieth of his full pay, and sometimes also of sundry allowances he is in receipt of when pensioned. This is for serving eight hours a day, Sundays not included. And a civil servant serving over seas on shore counts double time for pension, he may get his maximum at a comparatively early age if he has foreign service such as naval officers and men have. The pensions granted to officers and men in the Navy show that as regards Admirals they obtain less pension than a civil servant of the same age and drawing the same salary on retirement. Some grades of officers retire on practically full pay after thirty-five or thirty years' service; other grades get considerably less than full pay on retirement; and, as has been pointed out, some of the petty officers may be pensioned on practically full pay after twenty-two years' service, and others at less than half their full pay. Such a state of affairs ought not to exist, and a new and workable rule should be made applicable to all under the pendant.

A correspondent suggests that the following rule will meet all cases, viz.:—"All officers and men to be pensioned on one thirty-fifth of their full pay at the time of being pensioned for each year they have belonged to the Navy from the age of twenty. Allowances and additions to full pay are not counted, neither does half-pay for officers curtail the pension, for this latter condition is generally for the convenience of the Service, especially in the case of the higher grades, and in any case all officers are at the end of a telegraph wire. Often the final maximum pay depends on having had small half-pay. The above scheme should meet the views of all, and would certainly prevent much agitation." We offer no opinion ourselves.

Midshipman C. C. Dix, of the Barfleur, has given the "croakers" who condemn the employment of naval youngsters in mortal combat with the enemy another opportunity to howl. This dashing young follower of his great master, Nelson, is reported to have greatly distinguished himself at the attack on the Taku forts, in rescuing a comrade and disposing of two Chinamen with his revolver in that highly commendable effort.

The members of the Royal Navy Club, 1765-85, dined at the Whitehall Rooms, Hotel Metropole, on the 4th inst. Admiral of the Fleet Sir Frederick W. Richards, G.C.B., presided, and the guests of the evening were the Right Hon. George J. Goschen, M.P., First Lord of the Admiralty; Mr. J. Austen Chamberlain, M.P., the Civil Lord; Sir Evan MacGregor, K.C.B., the Permanent Secretary of the Admiralty; Sir Albert J. Durston, K.C.B., Engineer in Chief of the Navy; Sir Henry F. F. Navy Foreign.

The recent speeches of the German Emperor in relation to China and the world-position of the Empire he rules, have attracted a good deal of attention. The foul murder of Baron von Ketteler, the Minister in Peking, calls for exemplary punishment and vengeance, and the Emperor will not rest until the German flag floats over the Chinese capital. The departure of the Wittekind and Frankfurt with the marine troops was the occasion for this well-deserved denunciation of the unspeakable barbarity of the Chinese. At the launch of the battleship Wittelsbach, which has been built under the designation of "C," at Wilhelmshaven on Wednesday his Majesty used still more remarkable words, which merit much consideration in this country. After declaring that Germany had been compelled to adopt a world policy, he said that the ocean is indispensable for the country's greatness, and that it had been demonstrated that no great decision could ever again be arrived at on or in respect to the sea without Germany and the German Emperor. "The German people did not conquer and shed its blood thirty years ago in order to be thrust aside when great foreign problems are being settled. If that happens, then the position of the German people as a World Power is at an end. I am not inclined to allow matters to reach such a pass. It is the Kaiser's duty and highest privilege to employ suitable and even the sharpest methods to prevent it." The Emperor concluded by expressing his conviction that in this he had Germany's Princes and the entire people closely arrayed behind him.

The French cruiser Guichen, which left Brest on June 23 for the Far East, was ordered to steam at twenty knots, and to call at Oran to embark the Foreign Legion, and to take in coal at Obock. She was detained at Port Said by a breakdown of machinery. The Amiral Charner left on June 26 and the Friant on the next day, while the Sfax is preparing to depart as well as the Protet and two other cruisers. The transport Vinh-long was to leave Toulon on July 3, following the Nive, which takes out 600 men, a battery with 110 men, and seventy-five horses and mules, as well as a full complement of stores and ammunition, and all the material necessary for a hospital ship. The Cachar and the Colombo left at about the same time—each with 600 men, and the latter carrying also a battery, a telegraph section, and hospital attendants.

Happily, there is every reason to believe that the fine United States battleship Oregon will be saved. The loss of such a vessel would at any time have been most serious, but it would have been doubly so at present; and it is unfortunately the fact that the Oregon will not for some time be good for active service in the Far East. She is to be docked at Port Arthur. It is likely that she may be replaced temporarily by the Ohio. Captain Wilde reported that on Thursday of last week he anchored in a dense fog in seventeen fathoms of water, three miles south of the Hu-Ki light, in the Gulf of Pechili. He sent out two boats and sounded, and the least water was five and a half fathoms. The weather being clear, he got under way and struck a pinnacle rock. There was much water in the forward compartment, but the sea was smooth, and he chartered a steamer at Chefoo and lightened the ship. The rock was through the side of the ship above the double bottom, and there were nineteen small holes also through the bottom of the ship. Chief-Constructor Hiehorn said he was certain that she could not be saved, and compared the position of the battleship with that of the Paris, but she was floated off the rock on Monday.

Before the meeting of the two French squadrons in the neighbourhood of Lisbon, each engaged in tactical operations in its own accustomed waters, the coast-defence division, under Rear-Admiral Mallarmé, leaving Toulon, simulated an attack upon Mers-el-Kébir, defended by the local torpedo-boats, and then coaled at the port. Rear-Admiral Roustan left Toulon with the Charles Martel, and four cruisers and two destroyers, which represented an enemy prepared to dispute the passage to the friendly squadron, which had one knot less speed, and comprised the Brennus, Charlemagne, Gaulois, and Jauréguiberry, with four cruisers, under command of Vice-Admiral Fournier. Some interesting operations followed. Before the Northern Squadron left Brest an attempt was made to reproduce some of the conditions of a blockade of the port. Rear-Admiral Touchard in the Formidable, with three cruisers and two destroyers, representing the enemy, while the Dupuy-de-Lôme, under the orders of Admiral Menard, was to support the local torpedo-boats in their attack on the blockading cruisers. On the first night these were not discovered, and when the defenders went out on the next night, which was dark and rainy, they had no success, being discovered by the enemy's squadron outside. Some other interesting exercises took place before the squadron left for the south.

The discussion upon the subject of naval defence in the French Chamber was both curious and interesting. Although the general defence of the colonies was the subject upon the paper, the discussion broadened into a discursive debate between the advocates of the rival schools. The old and the young navy have had skirmishes in the Chamber on many occasions, but the debate of June 13 and 14 was more like a general engagement. M. Lockroy opened fire upon the new battleships of 15,000 tons which are proposed, and proceeded to demolish them to his own satisfaction. He declared that the programme was unreal and that the strategy proposed was in distinct contradiction to that adopted by the Superior Council of the Navy. Inasmuch as the new programme is declared to have been prepared with the help of that body, it would be a little curious to discover what the real strategy of the French Navy is. M. Lockroy is extremely irritated because battleships are to be built instead of big cruisers. He jeered at the Ministry for wishing to risk all upon the fate of a single battle, though he added, that there were some "attenuations" to that policy of warfare, since it was supposed by some that, upon the outbreak of hostilities, the battleships would remain in port, until diplomacy had finished its work of pacification. This sneer raised some angry feeling, and it must be said that M. Lockroy's strategists are really men of straw. M. Aimond delivered an eloquent address in support of the new proposal, declaring that it was impossible to create the required fleet out of cruisers, torpedo-boats, and submarine vessels. He also urged that France should build battleships on the ground that a limit was apparent to our building capacity, and that even if we could build the ships we could not find the men. Finally, he pointed out that to depend upon crushing us by commercial war was dangerously Utopian.

THE CHINESE CRISIS.

The Jelunga left Portsmouth on Saturday with reinforcements for ships on the China station. Commander J. B. Eustace goes out in command of the 430 bluejackets, and the officers with him are:—Lieuts. C. P. Mansel, H. B. Wilson, F. B. Noble, and A. K. Betty; Sub-Lieuts. F. C. Harvey, G. P. Legard, and W. E. Middleton; Staff Surg. W. E. Home (in medical charge), and Surgs. A. Gaskell, J. D. S. Milln, R. C. Munday, and J. A. Keogh; Assistant-Paymaster T. R. A. M. Burridge and Assistant-Clerk B. Shettle; six warrant officers. Major F. G. Kappey, R.M.A., is in command of the Marine detachment, which is 400 strong, and is composed of 124 men of the R.M.A. and 84 men of the Chatham, 84 men of the Portsmouth, and 108 men of the Plymouth divisions of R.M.L.I. The other officers of Marines are:—Capt. Parsons, Hugo Worthington, and H. D. E. O'Sullivan, and Lieuts. H. S. H. Richmond and J. Hazel, R.M.L.I., and Lieut. T. B. A. Leahy, R.M.A. With the exception of Surgeon Keogh, who is appointed to Hong Kong Hospital, all the appointments are made out to the Centurion. The Jelunga took on board some wireless telegraph apparatus for the use of the China squadron, and six 12pr. quick-firing guns to take the place of those that have been landed by Capt. Percy Scott, C.B.

Monday, July 2.

The British Consul at Chefoo telegraphed that the German Minister at Peking was murdered by native troops on June 18. Three Legations, which are not specified, were not destroyed on June 23.

Colonel Dorward telegraphed to the Secretary of State for War, under date Chefoo, Saturday, 1.15 p.m.:

"Arsenal north-east of Tien-tsin captured on the morning of June 27 by combined forces. British troops engaged were:—Naval Brigade and Chinese Regiment; all remained in reserve. Naval Brigade, four killed in action, 15 wounded, including two officers. Chinese Regiment, no casualties. Latter checked counter attack by Boxers on left flank with heavy loss to enemy."

Admiral Bruce telegraphed to the Admiralty, under date Taku, via Chefoo, 2.10 p.m., June 30:—

"The conduct of Commander Stewart, Algerine, and Commander Lanz, Illis (German), at bombardment Taku forts was magnificent, and elicited admiration of allied ships. River route to Tien-tsin 51 miles from Taku now open. Railroad now nine miles from Tien-tsin and road inward not (now?) quite safe. Communication with Commander-in-Chief Tien-tsin difficult. Force with Cradock had to fight way into Tien-tsin. Cradock also commander storming party previously forts at Taku. Fort which commanded river 13 miles above Taku was found deserted by Lieut. and Commander Keyes and blown up by him, leaving passage up the river free. Keyes reports to-day arsenal Tien-tsin captured June 27. Naval Brigade losses:—Five men killed; Lieut. Colomb, Endymion, slightly wounded; Gunner May and 21 men wounded. No further details. Warrenden quite well, doing very good work, taking charge of all our forces on river and along lines of communication. Vice-Admiral Alexieff, Governor-General of Port Arthur and Liaotung Province, Commander-in-Chief of all Russian forces in the East, has just arrived on his way to Tien-tsin, taking supreme command of Russian forces. Capt. Jellicoe shot through lung, doing very well. Forces landed to date:—

with 53 field guns, 36 machine guns. No details yet of killed and wounded with Commander-in-Chief."

Wednesday, July 4.

The German transports Wittekind and Frankfurt left yesterday with reinforcements for China. Their departure was witnessed by large crowds of spectators, and there was a great patriotic demonstration. The German Emperor and Empress and other Imperial personages were on the deck of the Hohen-zollern. The first batch of French troops from Saigon arrived at Taku on Sunday last. They are now pushing their way on to Tien-tsin, where the want of good drinking water is severely felt, as supplies cannot be obtained from the Peiho River, which is choked and poisoned by the corpses of Chinese and other victims of the bombardment. This is all the more felt as there has been no rain water available for months.

Intelligence received, dated Taku, June 30, that the Admirals had decided it would be impossible to relieve Peking without much larger forces.

Thursday, July 5.

Vice-Admiral Sir Edward Seymour reports from Tien-tsin, on June 30:—

"Chinese couriers arrived from Peking with short message, dated June 24, stating that all Legations except British, French, German, and part of Russian, destroyed. Europeans gathered in British Legation, have provisions, but ammunition scarce. One gate of city near Legation held by Europeans, with guns captured from Chinese. Five of Marine guard killed, and one officer wounded. Not much sickness at present. Chinese inundated country near here yesterday from the Grand Canal, object probably for defence of city to the south. No injury to us. General health good."

Friday, July 6.

Reports received from Shanghai report the statements concerning the ghastly scenes in Peking, where all Europeans and many native Christians are affirmed to have been massacred.

Mr. Brodrick announces that Japan has received assurances from Her Majesty's Government that the despatch of a large Japanese force to Taku would be welcomed. No objection had been raised by any European Power to this course. It is stated that Japan has now 20,000 troops mobilised and ready.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate, Manchester; and 30, Shoe Lane, London.

Navv Personal.

Admiral of the Fleet Lord John Hay, Admiral Sir Anthony Hoskins, and Captain the Hon. Hedworth Lambton had the honour of dining with the Prince of Wales on the occasion of His Royal Highness entertaining the Khedive of Egypt at Marlborough House on Monday last.

Admiral Sir Henry Fairfax, who died at Naples in March last while holding the Devonport command, left estate valued at £68,982 16s. 4d.

Admiral Sir Leopold M'Clintock, a former Commander-in-Chief of the North American and West Indian Station, was present at the Canadian Dominion Day banquet, held in the Metropole on Monday last; and, in responding to the toast of the Navy, remarked that he "had only to point to the recent services of the Naval Brigades in South Africa to secure the sympathy of their countrymen. The patriotic spirit which existed in the Navy was constantly fanned into flame by the kindly expressions of feeling in such gatherings as that at which he had now the honour of speaking."

Vice-Admiral Sir F. G. D. Bedford, Commander-in-Chief of the North American and West Indian Station, arrived at Quebec on Coronation Day in the Renown, and will return to Halifax, N.S., on the 17th inst., thus curtailing his usual period in the St. Lawrence River. A visit to Boston, U.S., is contemplated in return for that of Admiral Dewey, United States Navy, to Bermuda last year.

Vice-Admiral Lord Walter Kerr, senior Naval Lord, was present at the banquet given by the Marquis of Salisbury last Friday week in honour of the visit of the Khedive.

Vice-Admiral Sir John A. Fisher, Commander-in-Chief of the Mediterranean Squadron, leaves Malta to-day for Trieste, where he is due on Monday next, and will remain there a week with a squadron of battleships and cruisers.

Rear-Admiral A. L. Douglas, second Naval Lord, remarked, at the distribution of prizes last week at the Royal Hospital School, Greenwich, that "the Navy were always glad of recruits from Greenwich School, as they could rely on their making good warrant officers and seamen." This is undoubtedly true, but it is a pity that the contributions from this institution to the personnel of the Navy are not larger. Under existing regulations they are entirely voluntary on the part of the boys.

Rear-Admiral Day H. Bosanquet, Commander-in-Chief of the East Indian Squadron, arrived at Seychelles on Saturday last, in continuation of his annual visit to the western portion of his command.

Rear-Admiral Lewis A. Beaumont, Commander-in-Chief of the Pacific Station, arrived at the naval headquarters, Vancouver Island, on Saturday last in the Warspite.

The late Rear-Admiral Sherard Osborn, whose death occurred in 1875, at the comparatively early age of fifty-two, was intimately acquainted with China, and took part in the wars with that Empire 1842, 1858, and 1859. In 1857, while in command of the Furious, he conveyed a squadron of gunboats from Portsmouth to Hong Kong. The following year he took that paddle frigate up the Yang-tse as far as Hankow, no mean feat considering her draught of water. In 1863-64 he commanded the European-Chinese squadron during the Taeping Rebellion. He also highly distinguished himself in the Arctic Expeditions 1850-51 and 1853-54, in the latter of which he was away from his ship, the Pioneer, 117 days and covered 1,093 miles. During the Crimean Expedition he commanded the Vesuvius. In the year of his death he was the colleague of Admiral Sir Leopold M'Clintock (who attended the Dominion Day banquet this week) in organising the Arctic Expedition, 1875. He received the China medal, with three clasps for different engagements, 1842, 1847, and 1858; the Arctic medal (first issue) 1851, 1855; Crimean and Turkish medals, Legion of Honour, and Companionship of the Bath. The whole of these records of a glorious career were sold last week at Debenham's for £39.

Rear-Admiral A. K. Wilson, Controller of the Navy, responded for the Senior Service at the annual dinner of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers, at the Hotel Cecil last week. General Sir Evelyn Wood, V.C., in replying for the Army, said that he could speak of both Services, having served in the Navy as far back as 1854-55. "In a tight corner no man could desire a better comrade than one of the Queen's Navy."

Captains P. F. Tillard, of the Dido, and G. M. Henderson, of the Isis, arrived at Aden on Saturday last, and left the same day. Captain Lewis Wintz, of the Goliath, arrived at and departed from the same port the previous day, the three vessels being bound to China. It will be interesting to see the periods taken by the battleship and two cruisers, respectively, in making the passage to Hong Kong.

Captain W. Usborne-Moore, recently in command of the surveying vessel Research, takes exception to the appointments of two naval officers to the National Antarctic Expedition, who have no experience as nautical surveyors, nor of the rapid and accurate manipulation of delicate instruments, either on shore or at sea; and considers that the construction of a fairly accurate chart from the meagre observations obtainable in such a storm-swept and misty area as the Antarctic can only be learned in the surveying department of the Navy. The loss of priceless opportunities will, he believes, follow if the present intentions of the Expedition Committee are carried out. Captain Moore has devoted upwards of thirty years to surveying duties and carried out most important work. His opinions, therefore, are worthy of consideration.

Captain Vernon Tisdall, of the Theseus, and the officers and men serving with him, were not forgotten by Sir Norman Lockyer last week, at the joint meeting of the Royal and Royal Astronomical Societies at Burlington House, for the services they rendered at Santa Pola during the recent eclipse of the sun, when the thanks of the expedition were specially due to everyone on the Theseus for the material aid they afforded. Their skill, resourcefulness, and steady behaviour were admirable, and they were worthy successors of their comrades of the Melpomene on a similar occasion in the East Indies, 1898. Lieut. H. M. Doughty (G), of the Theseus, duplicated and confirmed most valuable observations, and every officer and man ably carried out the work he was asked to perform.

Captain F. F. Fegen, of the Leander, is to return home with that vessel after three years' service on being relieved by the Amphion, which will shortly be commissioned at Devonport.

Captain Henry Leah, of the Diana, with paid-off crews from Australia, arrived at Plymouth last Sunday night, and proceeded to Chatham.

Captain Sir Edward Chichester, Chief of the Naval Transport Service in South Africa, was entertained at a banquet in Cape Town on Saturday last, when a general gathering of the transport officers occurred. The United States Consul, Colonel Stowe, remarked that Americans would never forget Sir Edward whose utterances on one occasion during the Spanish-American War did more than anything else to promote good feeling between England and America.

Captain A. J. Horsley, of the Europa, is to call at Batavia on his way from Australia, with a view to the large number of men under his command being utilised if necessary in China.

Captain H. C. Reynolds, of the Pique, has been ordered to Hankow. This important port, 600 miles up the Yang-tse, invariably had two British war vessels stationed there, until the naval force in that river was reduced in the eighties to a gunboat at Shanghai, where a captain, as senior officer, had always been present in a corvette with at least two smaller vessels at his disposal. This was altered about the period that Shanghai Naval Yard was abolished!

Captain F. C. M. Noel, of the Wallaroo, Commander F. H. P. Freeman, of the Mohawk, and Lieut.-Commander J. C. Watson, of the Lizard, were all detached from the Australian command this week to reinforce the fleet in China.

Captain H. C. B. Hulbert, of the Pelorus, arrived at Sierra Leone on Monday, and left for Devonport on Thursday last.

Captain G. H. Cherry, of the Argonaut, left Plymouth on Wednesday evening last for China after a detention of two and a half months since he commissioned her, during which period she has been continuously under repair. It is hoped that Hong Kong will be reached without further mishap.

Lieutenants F. M. Leake and Philip Walter were appointed, respectively, to command the Bramble and Britomart on Friday in last week, but could not commission those vessels until the following morning. Although considerable inconvenience attended both officers and men in hastening their departure, the first-named gunboat left for China on Monday last, and the other the following day, having been detained through slight defects of machinery. Credit is due to both commanding officers in responding to the necessity for almost immediate departure for the Far East.

Lieut. M. H. Hodges, late of the Powerful's Naval Brigade at Ladysmith, was last week granted the freedom of the borough of Dorchester, his native place, and presented with binoculars and a silver inkstand. He was afterwards entertained at a banquet in the Town Hall.

Staff-Surgeon E. P. Mourilyan (recently promoted from the Doris), Assistant-Paymaster B. C. Allen, and Midshipmen J. W. Rainier, W. W. Sillem, and G. H. Lang, of the Doris, lately serving with the Naval Brigade in South Africa, have been invalided, and left for England in the transport Monteagle.

Fleet-Paymaster Joseph Whittall (retired) obtains the Greenwich Hospital Pension vacant by the death of Paymaster-in-Chief E. R. Chamberlain. Mr. Whittall is fortunate in securing this advantage, as he saw very little service, most of which was at home, and has been retired upwards of a quarter of a century.

Fleet-Paymaster A. C. Jeffreys has retired in consequence of ill-health three years before the compulsory age. Having considerable interests at Malta he has invariably foregone home-service, and thereby allowed that advantage to pass to his brother officers.

Lieut.-Col. G. J. Airey, late R.M.L.I., a retired Lieut.-Colonel of the New South Wales Artillery, has been erroneously mentioned as the commanding officer of the Bushmen's Corps from that colony who are now serving in South Africa. Lieut.-Colonel H. P. Airey, of the Colonial Artillery, is the gallant officer commanding the corps afore mentioned, and has not served either in the Army or Royal Marine forces.

Captain L. W. Miller and Lieuts. B. J. D. Walthall, G. C. Rooney, and H. F. Montgomery, R.M.L.I., have qualified in subjects "c" and "d" for promotion. Captain J. L. Homer, R.M.A., has been selected to compete at the Bisley Rifle Meeting.

Lieut. W. T. C. Jones, R.M.L.I., T. B. Luard, Assistant-Instructor of Musketry, Chatham, and N. A. W. Scott, Assistant-Instructor of Musketry, Depot, attain the rank of Captain on augmentation of the Royal Marine Forces from April 1.

MR. T. H. CLARKE, military boot manufacturer, of Queen Square, Fermoy, has invented a capital legging, which is being tested by the German War Office. It possesses great advantages over any other puttie or legging we have hitherto seen, and ought to prove invaluable for campaigning and sporting purposes. Simplicity and comfort are two great recommendations.

IN the recent international revolver match between the French and American teams, the three highest scores were made with Colt's new Service revolver.

FAMILIES OF INVALIDED SOLDIERS.—It has been brought to the notice of the Commander-in-Chief that it is not generally understood by soldiers invalided home that allotments from their pay cease on their return home; and that in many cases the soldier's pay has accumulated during his treatment in hospital, while his family have felt the want of the allotment they received while he was abroad. The Secretary of State for War has, therefore, directed that soldiers in the position described shall be made aware of the cessation of allotments, and that every facility shall be given them to send remittances to their families, the cost of such remittances, so long as they remain sick, being borne by the public. In any case in which a soldier refuses to make such remittances to his family, his liability under the Army Act must be pointed out to him and if he adheres to his refusal steps must be taken to enforce the provisions of the Act, in accordance with the instructions of Army Order 159 of last September. In all cases in which a soldier is unable to transact business, such arrangements must be made as seem most desirable.

NATIONAL RIFLE ASSOCIATION.—An Army order gives instructions in regard to the meeting of the National Rifle Association to be held at Bisley from the 9th to the 21st inst. The dates fixed for the more purely Service competitions are:—Royal Cambridge Challenge Shield, July 21; United Service Challenge Cup, July 20; Brinsmead Challenge Shield, July 13; Evelyn Wood Prize, July 7. In addition to these, which are team contests, many competitions will be open during the meeting to individual members of the Regular Army, as well as a competition for individual members of the Militia, exclusive of officers and permanent staff. Commanding officers of cavalry regiments which intend to compete for the Royal Cambridge Challenge Shield are to send the proper forms to the Under-Secretary of State, War Office, not later than noon on July 11. In the case of all other competitions entries will be addressed direct to the Secretary of the National Rifle Association, 12, Pall Mall East, S.W.

MILITIAMEN AND RESERVISTS.—An Army order deals with the granting of furloughs to re-enlisted soldiers, ex-Reservists of all branches of the Service except infantry and Militia battalions. As to re-enlisted soldiers, it states they may be allowed to proceed on furlough under the usual Service conditions. Ex-Reservists, other than infantrymen, may be permitted to proceed on furlough as soon as their services can be spared. Militiamen in all battalions embodied prior to March 6 may be permitted to go on furlough, provided that in the infantry they have satisfactorily completed musketry and company and battalion training. Prior to being granted furlough, Militiamen will be formed into parties, and sent armed and equipped to the permanent headquarters of their corps, where they will leave their arms and equipment, and, if they desire it, their uniform, before they proceed on furlough. It is to be distinctly understood by the men of all these categories, says the order, that they are granted such furloughs as an indulgence and not as a right, and to enable them to keep in touch with their civil occupations, for which purpose they will be allowed to wear plain clothes. They can, therefore, only be granted furloughs when their services can be spared, and when they satisfy their commanding officers that there are reasonable grounds for their wishing to return home. The men will be subject to recall should their services be required at seven days' notice, and their families will not be entitled to separation allowances whilst they are on furlough.

AN amended statement of Vote X. of the Army Estimates, 1900-1901, presented on Feb. 22 has been issued. The vote, which amounts to £2,670,700, has reference to works, buildings, and repairs, which includes cost, pay, &c., of the staff for engineering services.

LORD METHUEN'S DESPATCHES.—The Morning Post published on Wednesday an explanation from Mr. Winston Churchill, with reference to Lord Methuen's despatches. Mr. Churchill's statement is:—

"After their respective reverses Lord Methuen and Gen. Gatacre both transmitted reports to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa. Lord Methuen's despatch reached Gen. Buller while he was still in supreme command. Gen. Buller forwarded it to the Secretary of State without comment. Gen. Gatacre's despatch, on the contrary, miscarried in the post, and was delayed more than a week. It therefore reached Gen. Buller when he was no longer Commander-in-Chief, and was passed on to Lord Roberts, who commented on it as published. Meanwhile Lord Methuen's despatch had proceeded to England, where it was found that he had made a compilation of the various reports of brigadiers and colonels, instead of writing a general narrative embracing the reports of his subordinates, which course is prescribed and is the usual form. No exception whatever was taken to the spirit of Lord Methuen's despatch, but, in order that the regular custom should be observed, he was requested to rewrite it in the correct and formal style. The despatch therefore came back to South Africa, where, since it was a matter already finally disposed of by General Buller, Lord Roberts could not in fairness intervene. He therefore made no observations on it, and none such exists or has ever been put on record."

VOLUNTEER FIELD ARTILLERY.—More than ordinary interest has been taken in the experiment for the transformation of Volunteer artillery of position into field artillery, capable of acting with mobile forces in the field. The 1st Monmouth Brigade of Volunteer Artillery have just concluded the special three months' training for which they offered themselves. They spent the whole of the time at Aldershot and Salisbury Plain, and upon their leaving Col. P. H. Hammond, commanding R.A. at Aldershot, issued district orders in the course of which he said:—

"The Colonel on the Staff commanding R.A., Aldershot, desires to express to Col. Wallis and the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the Monmouth Volunteer Artillery his appreciation of the way they have all worked to bring their batteries up to the efficient state they have now reached. Considering the short time that they have been mobilised and the many unavoidable delays which unfortunately occurred in fitting out the batteries with their equipment and horses, the result attained is most creditable. The Colonel on the Staff hopes that the batteries may be able to come out in successive years, for a shorter time, in order that they may keep up the efficiency they have reached."

Gen. Turner, Inspector-General of Auxiliary Forces, while expressing his complete satisfaction at the results of his inspection, at which "most praiseworthy efficiency was shown," adds:—

"The Inspector-General of Auxiliary Forces hopes that the signal example of the Monmouth Artillery will be followed by other corps. The former, however, must always be regarded as the pioneer of Volunteer field artillery."

THE Queen has commanded that the British Central Africa Rifles shall in future be designated the "Central Africa Regiment."

LETTERS for officers and men serving with the Kumasi Expedition should be addressed to Ashanti Field Force, Cape Coast, as at the present time there is much delay caused by incorrect addresses.

SIXTY per cent. of the men forming the Militia Brigade now stationed at Colchester have volunteered for service in China if required. The brigade consists of the 5th Batn. Royal Warwickshire, 4th Batn. Norfolk, 3rd Batn. Bedfordshire, and 4th Batn. Essex Regiment.

EIGHT battalions of Militia have been ordered for service in the experimental mobilisation of the Thames District in August—the 5th Lancashire Fusiliers and 5th Batn. Rifle Brigade at Chatham, the 3rd and 4th Connaught Rangers at Gravesend, the 3rd and 4th Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers at Aldershot, the 4th Essex at Colchester, and the 7th Batn. Rifle Brigade at Shorncliffe.

WE are requested to contradict the statement which has been circulated in several papers, that the City Imperial Volunteers failed to raise the proper number of recruits for their last draft. So far from that being so, the draft, although unexpected, was more than fully made up within 48 hours after the request reached the regiment. The only difficulty has been the selection of the best men for enrolment by the Lord Mayor from the lists forwarded by the Volunteer commanding officers. As at present arranged the men will leave for South Africa on the 12th inst., by which time everything will be ready.

THE COLT AUTOMATIC QUICK-FIRING MACHINE-GUN AND DUNDONALD GALLOPING GUN-CARRIAGE.

Colt Automatic Guns, taking the English Service ammunition of
303 calibre, and mounted on DUNDONALD GALLOPING CAR-RIAGES, are now being largely used in South Africa, both by Imperial and Colonial troops.

The Dundonald Carriage carries 2,000 rounds of ammunition, loaded in belts ready for immediate use, and is protected by patent armour plate.
The Carriage can be taken into action by one man and horse, and can be unlim-bered and brought into action within the space of thirty seconds, the Colt Gun being then ready to pour out a stream of bullets at the rate of over 450 rounds per minute, or less if required.

The Dundonald Galloping Ammunition Cart is constructed to carry either 7,000 or 10,500 rounds, loaded in belts and ready for transfer to the Colt Guns at a moment's notice. This also can be galloped into action and unlimbered with the same speed as the Gun Carriage, and therefore forms a most valuable adjunct to the Colt Gun and Dundonald Carriage.

The Dundonald General Service Cart. Specially
adapted for South African Service. The lightest, strongest, most serviceable
Two-wheeled Cart made. Constructed with a Steel Frame and Hide Bottom.
Carries over 1,000 lbs. of Baggage, contains over 100 cubic feet covered space,
weighs about 600 lbs.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN WAR.

THE country is now feeling in an unmistakable manner the responsibilities of Empire. In three quarters of the globe, thousands of miles apart, the forces of the Crown are engaged. For days we have waited, almost with bated breath, for the issue of the intensely dramatic crisis existing in Peking. Kumasi, with its beleaguered garrison gallantly fighting for life, is passing also through a crisis on the issue of which hangs the life or death of many of our fellow subjects, but we have become so accustomed to small wars that the little campaign on the West Coast of Africa secures but scant attention in the presence of the overwhelming peril confronting the great Powers in China, and the immensity of British interests affected by the continuance of the South African War. It is with the latter that we are concerned here, but it is interesting to note, en passant, the remarkable fact, as an illustration of the vast resources of the British Empire, and of the capabilities of its various outlying parts for mutual assistance, that each of the three centres of action referred to depends for its fighting forces upon different bases, widely separated from one another, yet all embraced within the circuit of the Imperial domain. Thus it is that our forces in China can be reinforced from India, those in Ashanti from Central Africa and the West Indian Isles, and those in South Africa from the home country and her stalwart colonies. The enormous power for mutual support and resistance possessed by such a State, and the unrivalled elasticity conferred upon its parts by the high degree of self-government they exercise, must be apparent to every observer. To Great Britain, so tenacious of personal liberty and so averse to compulsory military service, these great qualities of our common Empire are of priceless value, and full of good augury and encouragement at a time when still heavier demands upon our energy and resources may be made in the not far-distant future.

During the past week there has been a revival of activity in the Transvaal. Sniping at the British outposts had for some time been the daily occupation of the enemy, who still occasionally proved their skill in laying ambushes by capturing small parties of our scouts. But the increasing difficulty experienced by Commandant General Louis Botha in keeping his burghers together with no more serious fighting on hand, or in view, induced him to try conclusions with Lord Roberts by attacking his flanks and rear, emulating the successful raids of De Wet to the south of the Vaal. The flanks of the British Army at Pretoria are covered by detachments at Rustenburg fifty miles west, and near Bronkspuit thirty-five miles east of the capital; also at Springs, the terminus of the branch line from Johannesburg, and an important strategical point protecting the lines both from Pretoria and Natal. At all of these points, as well as at others, there has been recent fighting, as well as at Greylingstad, midway between Heidelberg and Standerton, with partial interruption of the telegraph and railway in their neighbourhood.

Lord Roberts, feeling for the second time the inconvenience caused by the proximity of the enemy pressing on his right flank, and threatening the railway, despatched General Hutton with his Mounted Infantry on the 5th inst. from Pretoria to reinforce Colonel Mahon at Springs, and drive back the enemy to the east of Bronkspuit. An engagement ensued which lasted during the two following days, and successfully attained its object. The Boers, some 3,000, strong with several guns, were beaten off and retired towards Middleburg. The conspicuous gallantry on this occasion of the Imperial Light Horse, who lost two officers killed, was specially reported by Lord Roberts. On Sunday Hutton was again attacked by 5,000 Boers at Rietfontein, twenty miles north of Springs, but repelled the assault with ease, assisted by the powerful fire of some 5-in. guns present with his force. While the engagements just recorded were proceeding, the Boer Commandant Limmer, with considerable audacity in existing circumstances, demanded the surrender of Rustenburg held by a small garrison under Major Hanbury Tracy of the Blues. The demand was boldly and promptly refused by that officer, who, moreover, attacked the enemy, frustrated their attempt to seize the heights commanding the town, and drove them off with heavy loss. In this very creditable affair the garrison was assisted by a force of Bushmen under Colonel Holdsworth, 7th Hussars, who reached the scene of action after a forced march of forty-eight miles from the Zeerust district, and at once joined the fighting line. The commando, however, although baffled in the attempt to retake Rustenburg, remained a source of disquiet in the district. Since the Boers have taken to raiding the communications the service of escorting convoys has become extremely hazardous. On Saturday an attack was made by 100 Boers with two 14-pounders on a convoy proceeding from Greylingstad to Vlaktefontein, escorted by 150 of Strathcona's and Thorneycroft's Horse. The convoy was assailed where the road passes through a defile. Reinforcements with guns were fortunately at hand, and by a skilful disposition of the troops commanding ground was taken, the enemy were checked and finally driven back clear of the defile, through which the convoy passed in safety. The country lying a few miles north of Standerton, near Wolve Spruit and the Vaal River, was the scene of a skirmish on Monday between a party of the South African Light Horse and a fairly strong body of the enemy, who retired after some heavy firing. To the north of Pretoria also, near Waterfall and Wonderboom, a party of the Scots Greys had a brush on Wednesday with the commandoes of Lucas Meyer and Erasmus, who had been raiding the neighbouring farms. The Greys, having been reinforced by the Mounted Infantry, the enemy retired. The same force, apparently, attacked a British post eighteen miles west of Pretoria, at Nitral's Nek, in superior numbers on Wednesday, and, before reinforcements arrived captured the Nek, taking two guns of O Battery, R.H.A., the greater part of a squadron of the Greys, and about ninety men of the 2nd Batn. Lincoln Regiment. As a set-off to this reverse, the enemy were worsted in an attack made simultaneously on the British outposts north of Pretoria, where the 7th Dragoon Guards were skilfully handled by Lieut.-Colonel Lowe, as well as in an engagement near Krugersdorp, in which General Smith-Dorrien defeated the Boers with heavy loss. These simultaneous attacks on the front, left, and left-rear of the British afford evidence of considerable skill and boldness on the part of Louis Botha and his lieutenants.

In the Orange River Colony a very important success has crowned Lord Roberts's operations against De Wet. Bethlehem, the last of Mr. Steyn's capitals, was captured on Saturday, and the British columns brought within two days' march of Fouriesburg, the ex-President's supposed present place of retreat. General Clements, fighting his way from Winburg and Senekal, reached Lindley, eight miles to the north-east, early in the present month, and there joined hands with General Paget. On the 3rd inst., their columns were moving south, and on that day Paget drove the enemy from a strong position six miles from Lindley. Next day they were within fifteen miles of Bethlehem, and on the 6th General Clements summoned the place to surrender. Christian De Wet refused to yield and the place was assaulted from two different points. The country being mountainous, cavalry was of little use, and to the infantry fell the arduous work and the glory of the day. Paget, by a well-planned turning manœuvre, got possession of a height commanding the town. It was gallantly captured—not without some loss—by the 1st Batn. Royal Munster Fusiliers and the 2nd Batn. Yorkshire Light Infantry. The British loss would have been heavier but for the excellent practice of the 38th Field Battery and the battery of the City Imperial Volunteers. The simultaneous attack made by General Clements's Brigade was equally successful, the 1st Batn. Royal Irish Regiment capturing the Boer position with great dash; and with it one of the British guns lost at Stormberg. On the following morning the assault on the town was pushed home, and at noon the place was in the hands of the British. On Sunday, General Broadwood's cavalry brigade, acting in advance of Sir Archibald Hunter's command, reached Bethlehem, and Hunter's main body was also approaching that point of concentration. We are not told in what direction De Wet retreated, possibly to Harri-smith, or to join Steyn at Fouriesburg. In either case the hour of their final stand and subsequent surrender must now be rapidly approaching.

Meanwhile, the double cordon from Winburg to Ficksburg, and back thence to Senekal has been rigidly maintained by Sir Leslie Rundle and Brabant. Their scouts have searched the country for miles in rear of these lines, but have found no trace of armed Boers, a sufficient proof of the efficiency of the dispositions made for keeping the enemy to the north of Ficksburg. A steady contraction of the hostile area continues. The commandoes have been drawn in from the west, evacuating all their strong positions round Senekal. This was done doubtless in order to present as strong a front as possible to the British advance on Bethlehem, where De Wet's recent defeat must have proved a crushing blow to all on both sides of the Vaal who still cherish a hope or belief that the Boer cause is not yet wholly lost. On the 4th inst. a sudden and desperate assault was delivered at midnight on the British lines at Ficksburg. Though fierce while it lasted, it was of short duration, and was easily repulsed. The Boers are reported to be short of both food and ammunition, which is not improbable as they now have no bases of supply left to them south of the Vaal of any importance.

The process of disintegration is now following an almost natural course in Mr. Steyn's gradually narrowing sphere of influence. His State Secretary, State Attorney, and other leading men of his late Government, stripped of all vestige of authority, and convinced of the reckless folly of further resistance, surrendered to the British Commander at Heilbron on Sunday. It is to be hoped, in the interest of both sides in this conflict, as well as in the general interests of South Africa, that this example will be speedily followed by the ex-Presidents of the late Republics. The condition of almost impotence to which Mr. Steyn is reduced has been lately shown by the inability of his commanders to feed and guard the prisoners who have fallen into their hands. Without their officers, ragged, half-starved, and footsore, 659 of the hapless Nottingham Militia and others captured by De Wet were turned adrift without food over the Natal border, to find their way to Ladysmith through the inhospitable passes of the Drakenberg, and to testify by their deplorable condition to the helplessness of the Boer Commanders and the hopelessness of their cause. The Boer success of Wednesday near Pretoria is to be deplored, but it only tends to show how difficult Lord Roberts's task still is, and how watchful all ranks will have to be during the next few months.

Army Notes.

In China only the unexpected is certain to happen. So far from the Europeans in Peking having been done to death by fire, torture, and the bullet, at the time of writing they are said to be still holding out in the British and French Legations, and strong enough to take a Chinese Palace. Prince Ching, through Sir Robert Hart, has promised them protection, and the Empress is supposed to have changed her policy. Even the East, rich as it is in surprises, never gave us a more complete transformation scene than this. How much we may believe is quite another story. Two points, however, stand clearly out from "a maze of uncertainties"; the Legations have not yet been destroyed, and the Chinese are divided. In these circumstances the exertions of Japan to put a force in the field should receive all the assistance from the Powers it is possible for them to give. She will need it all—and more, for the days when a foreign army could force its will on the Chinese Empire are past and gone. To argue from the Chino-Japanese War, the War of 1860, the War of 1842, is to woefully underrate the gravity of the present situation. We are face to face now, not with the Chinese Government, but with the Chinese people. Heretofore only the fringe of the Empire has been invaded by the foreigner, and the moment trade and other concessions were granted, the armed force, which supported his demands, went home. The establishment of Germany at Kiao-Chau, in the turbulent province of Shantung, is rightly regarded by the Chinese as a menace to their national existence, and is one of the main causes of the present outbreak. The people who say that China is a geographical expression, and that patriotism is an unknown quantity in a Celestial, have never travelled in the countries washed by the Pacific. A patriotism which will fight for immemorial customs, ideals, and religion can be as effective as a patriotism which will fight for the State, and it is this patriotism which Europeans have aroused against them in the Far East. Moreover, with an object to fight for, European weapons in large quantities, and large bodies of troops, trained by European mercenaries, the Chinese are likely to prove more formidable, from the military point of view, than Europeans are inclined to believe.

The escape of 600 men and one lady from Kumasi is a stirring story. One hardly knows which to admire most, the courage of Sir Frederick Hodgson, the skill and resource of Major Morris, or the endurance of the force as a whole. That it should have been able by a ruse to elude the besieging Ashanti army, and, fighting against nature and warlike savages all the way, arrive at the nearest post in three days with trifling loss, is an achievement worthy of the highest praise. As for the three white men who remained behind in Kumasi to continue the defence of the fort, they are more than gallant; they are made of the heroic stuff which has enabled us to build up the greatest world-power in history. Now that the garrison is reduced by 600 it is more than likely the food supplies in Kumasi will hold out until the arrival of the relief column under Colonel Willcocks. Unfortunately, signs are not wanting that the difficulties of the situation are increasing, and that the force at Colonel Willcocks' disposal is too weak to successfully undertake the punishment of the rebels. As the garrisons in Nigeria have been greatly reduced in order to provide men for the Gold Coast, and an outbreak is by no means impossible elsewhere in West Africa, especially in Gambia, where the Mandingoes have murdered two white men, the prospect which the immediate future opens up is by no means attractive. As luck has enabled us to emerge triumphantly from even tighter corners, so it may again. But the statesmanship that depends on luck sometimes finds itself face to face with disaster, and that is what threatens in Ashanti, or would threaten were our men cast in the same mould as the defenders of Her Majesty's Treasury. Unfortunately, there is a likelihood of the necessity arising for the despatch of a new punitive expedition. That is to say, the doing again of work twice done already. This miserable policy Treasury officers would have us believe is cheap. It may be that, but it is very lowering to our prestige on the West Coast of Africa.

We know now what the aim of the Army League is. The fundamental principles of its operations have been laid down. They are thus set forth:—

- (1) That our existing military organisation is dangerously deficient.
- (2) That no Government will deal adequately with the subject unless forced to do so by the pressure of public opinion.
- (3) That the public generally is ignorant of the real state of affairs.
- (4) That when it understands the military position of the country the public will express its opinion in a way that cannot be ignored by Government. That it will, in fact, issue that "mandate" which we are told the Government desires to receive before taking action.
- (5) That it is therefore necessary to lose no time in enlightening the public as to the facts; and
- (6) That this is to be the principal business of the "Army League."

Mr. H. F. Wyatt, who has had much to do with the creation of the League, stated lately that its great object would be, "To ensure that a memorandum stating the needs of the Army, in the view of the military adviser (not 'advisers') of the Crown, should be presented annually to Parliament, the Treasury to have no cognisance of this memorandum or of any of the proposals contained in it prior to presentation." It is held that the result of this proposal will be to transfer the decision on points of supreme importance from Treasury clerks and other mysterious individuals, who cannot afterwards be named when they are wanted, to Parliament and to the nation. An organisation run on these lines can do no harm if it does no good. The time is arriving when the responsibility of the Treasury requires to be fixed more clearly than it is at present, for it cannot be good to have that department continually upsetting estimates as it does, and always going off scot free, when difficulties have to be faced and we are unprepared to meet them.

What a wonderful "Nonsense Book" a collection of press headlines, and "wild cat telegrams" from South Africa would make—what a curious record of unfulfilled prophecies and falsified hopes for the future historian to dip—as Macaulay did—into the ballad lore of the times of which he wrote. The escape of any Boer leader might be bet upon as a certainty the moment the sub-editors took to describing his position as "desperate"; and when the headlines treated the condition of a commando as "hopeless," owing to "the closing of the net" around it, the odds were in favour of a speedy announcement that the "slim" burghers had marched off at their ease with guns and baggage. That "net" image was very tempting. For months past it was used—once it was applied to Cronje's retreat to Paardeberg, when the army he commanded was held fast on the Modder by Kitchener after they had marched away from their trenches in front of Methuen. Botha and Olivier had been bagged over and over again, but got away somehow; and as for De Wet, nothing but magical gifts can have got him out of the toils on half a dozen occasions when he was surrounded by strategical reticulations by as many columns north, south, east, and west! But the Boer guns! Where are they? How is it that they are carried off from the very midst of mounted infantry which have carried the Boer positions, as happened the other day? When the Orange River Free State was announced by Lord Roberts to be no State at all, either Free or Republican, the region became a vigorous belligerent annoyance to our troops, and menaced the communications of the British Army with real dangers. Ex-President Steyn, who was "very anxious to come in," we were told, exhibited the most obstinate reluctance to any course of the kind, and transferred himself from one temporary capital to the other, at the head of his burghers, bent on war and mischief. There is no war now, it is said—there is a guerilla. But the accounts of the bands 3,000 strong here, and 2,000 strong there, with guns, attacking garrisons, and demonstrating against railways and convoys far apart, indicate that there still is an enemy in the field which is not négligeable, and which serves the shadowy governments which, with moveable capitals, represents the late Orange River Free State and the Republic of the Transvaal. It is now nine months since the Boer Governments declared war against the Queen, and we shall be fortunate if Lord Roberts can show the world that it is over before the close of the year.

Major-General Turner is proving himself, though no one who knows him could have doubted it, the right man in the right place as Inspector-General of Auxiliary Forces. He evidently is not satisfied with reports only, but likes to see for himself how matters stand, and, seeing, has the independence to speak freely. General Turner inspected the thirteen Militia battalions embodied at Aldershot on the 6th inst. At the close of the parade he assembled the commanding officers, complimented them on the condition and physique of their commands, and made known his regret at finding the men so badly clothed and equipped. He went further and promised that his influence would be exerted to secure for the Militia force generally that proper treatment which it deserves. General Turner did not mince matters; he indicated that the War Office was sensible of its duty but powerless to do anything unless the Treasury gave it the support that is necessary. Herein lies the crux of the whole question of defence. It is so usual to hear it said that the War Office is a thoroughly rotten department of State that the public have come to forget how completely subservient it is to the will of the Chancellor of the Exchequer and his officials. The policy of successive Governments has been inexcusable. They have been only too ready to accept fresh obligations in different parts of the world, but they have taken no steps to add to the strength of our Army. Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof has been the principle upon which all have acted. And so it has come about that the Militia has been entirely neglected. It provides us with a force always available for any service, if only it were encouraged and properly organised and equipped. It has been starved unmercifully, and so neglected that it has lost its vitality to a great extent. It is the wish of General Turner to place it on a sounder basis, and to give it the wherewithal to enable it to play its part properly. Supported as he is by the Service members, and will be, we feel sure, by the newly formed Army League, General Turner may look hopefully to the future; and the taxpayer is to be congratulated upon possessing in him an Inspector-General of Auxiliary Forces who, as a close student of military history, knows well what false economy it is to maintain on paper forces which are rendered useless for want of organisation and equipment. Lord Lansdowne has told us that he is sensible of the folly of past procedure, so far as the Militia is concerned, and is adopting measures of reform which will enable units to take the field in future in all senses fitted for the serious work of war. We can only accept the War Minister's assurances in good faith. After all that has happened lately we are not satisfied that our best-known statesmen are as sensible as they ought to be of the true dignity of a nation in times like those in which we live. With Europe armed to the teeth, an Empire like ours cannot afford to leave the big question of defence unreservedly in the hands of well-meaning but essentially impractical Treasury officials whose ideas are centred in annual Budgets.

A case like that of John Thomas Tyson, charged at Manchester with being a deserter from the Militia, cannot fail to do incalculable mischief. In April last, according to published facts, Tyson wrote to the colour-sergeant of the 6th Batn. Manchester Regiment to ask when the battalion would be mobilised. He was anxious, he said, to rejoin the ranks. The colour-sergeant, however, was in South Africa. Tyson's request, having reached the authorities at Aldershot, his arrest followed on the charge of desertion. The County Court discharged the case, and the magistrate declared that, if the prosecution were persisted in, the Home Secretary would be asked to intervene. Notwithstanding this, Tyson, who had been re-arrested, was again charged at Lancaster with desertion. He was discharged for the second time after a trial before a specially-constituted court, and immediately afterwards he was arrested for the third time before the eyes of the magistrate. Technically, of course, the man was absolutely wrong in having absented himself from military duty, but the British public do not understand such matters. Tyson's case has been reported in every paper in the kingdom, and will be discussed in ale houses throughout the length and breadth of the land, with the result that there will be a strong feeling against service in the Militia. It does seem an immense pity that such cases cannot be dealt with in some way less calculated to create erroneous impressions on the part of would-be recruits. In a country where service is voluntary to allow frivolous technicalities to override the dictates of common sense does seem to be rather a mistaken policy.

A valued correspondent, who deserves to have his say at the present moment, writes to us:—"Lord Wemyss is not in accord with the policy of the War Office as regards the Volunteers. His lordship holds that the whole principles of Volunteering have been changed. There is no denying that they have been, but for this the War Office is not to blame. Lord Lansdowne and Lord Wolseley have simply gauged properly the feelings of the force. They found that Volunteers throughout the country were opposed to the do-as-you-please ideas which prevailed in the days when Lord Wemyss was an active member of the London Scottish. The Volunteer of to-day takes a more practical view. He objects to being called 'a man with a musket,' and prefers to be taken seriously. He has enrolled himself under the banner of the officers of the Brigade of Guards. For years past the senior officers of the Brigade of Guards have been working enthusiastically, led in the first instance by Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, to level up the Volunteers. Prince Edward may fairly be said to have been the first to recognise the true spirit of Volunteering. He soon succeeded in gaining others to his views, and so it came about that by degrees the metropolitan contingent of the Volunteer force was regarded seriously. The force generally has been ready to follow in the footsteps of the metropolitan corps. The services performed by the officers of the Brigade of Guards have been of the utmost value, and it is only right that these should be acknowledged. As I understand it, Lord Wemyss would wish to put the clock back, but it would be cruelly hard on Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar and the other senior Guardsmen, who were so wise in their generation, if he succeeded. What Prince Edward and other Guardsmen said was this—'These men are full of martial enthusiasm; they want to push on to better things. Why, then, keep them in leading-strings? Why not help them to become what they desire to be, a useful and disciplined body. If only London leads the way the provinces will follow. It is our duty, directly associated as we are with the London corps, to lead the party of progress.' So it has come to pass that these unfortunate differences have arisen in the London Scottish, the corps of all others in the Metropolis which one would have expected to stand firm in support of the Government, which, if it has made a mistake, has done so on the advice of the best friends the Volunteers have had, the Guardsmen who have learnt by years of close observance to appreciate their value, and have sought to advance their best interests."

The story of the capture of the 13th Battalion (Irish) Yeomanry, under command of Lieut.-Colonel Spragge, D.S.O., is now made more clear, and from the accounts to hand it is evident that no fault rests with either officers or men. The battalion was ordered by telegram to join Sir Henry Colville at Lindley on Saturday night, May 26. They received the order on Friday mid-day. It was a fifty-mile march. The corps had just accomplished a march of fifteen miles, and had scarcely finished feeding and watering horses when they were ordered to resaddle. They picked up one day's rations and started on Friday at 5 p.m. They arrived at Lindley on Sunday midday. The leading company entered Lindley as the Boer horsemen left, but no instructions were found from Sir Henry Colville, who had marched for Heilbron that morning. The battalion had a convoy of twenty-six waggons in charge. On finding that the Boers were surrounding Lindley, Colonel Spragge withdrew his convoy, which had not entered the town, and from Sunday afternoon till the Thursday afternoon the plucky troopers held their own on kopjes. On the Thursday morning the Boers procured three guns, with which they shelled the kopjes. Not a bit of help did the Yeomanry receive from anybody. Colonel Spragge was rendered helpless. A message reached Lord Methuen at 4.30 on Thursday afternoon. He promptly advanced to the aid of the gallant Yeomen, and arrived at noon on Friday. They had been obliged to surrender to the guns at 4 p.m. on Thursday after fifty casualties, because their ammunition was exhausted. It will be seen, therefore, how well they upheld the honour of their fighting race.

The match, Regulars and Volunteers, which was shot at Bisley on Monday, did not give much support to those who have been so ready to condemn our present Service rifle. The special correspondent of the Times says:—"In reference to this match, and having regard to the considerable amount of ill-informed matter which has been written by amateurs of late concerning the inferiority of the Service rifle, I have thought it worth while to insert the names of the rifles used by each competitor, and the result, so far as mere accuracy of firing goes, is by no means unsatisfactory from the English point of view." Some writers are so cocksure as to the inferiority of our rifle, that not even the strongest arguments, we fear, will convince them of their error; but the fact remains, nevertheless, that the only complaints which we have heard of the rifle comes from them, and we may venture to say that we should have been informed almost as soon as anybody if its faults had been all that has been made out. Of course, everyone would prefer an automatic rifle if a suitable one could be found, as it would do away with that dragging and pushing of the bolt action when extracting and loading, which is so against good aim in action; but the perfect rifle has yet to be found. Meanwhile, it is no use saying that our present Service rifle is an inferior weapon, for it is not. Major Edward Palliser, who understands this subject as well as most people, is, we find, entirely in favour of an automatic weapon, though he agrees with us as to the merits of the arm now in possession of our troops, the excellence of which a well-known district musketry inspector assures us cannot be questioned by anyone who has handled it on service.

Naturally enough public opinion is deeply stirred by Mr. Burdett-Coutt's charges directed against hospital management in South Africa, and equally naturally eminent surgeons have done their best to show that there is another side to the story. Unfortunately they seldom, or never, stick to the point. The devotion and ability of the Medical Staff are not in question, neither is the humanity of Lord Roberts, so that it is pure waste of time to argue as if they were. Moreover, the perfection of the hospital organisation in Natal is no reply to critics, who maintain that the hospital arrangements in the Orange Free State left much to be desired. Natal is a loyal Colony of limited area, with a safe harbour in touch with the railways. Every facility has been given by the Government to the military authorities in order to effect rapid transport of stores, and valuable local assistance has been rendered by the citizens of Maritzburg and Durban. At Bloemfontein our medical officers were made to feel every hour in the day that the city was the capital of a conquered territory. It is 700 miles from Cape Town, and north of it the main Army was advancing rapidly on Pretoria, with consequent pressure on the lines of communications. Hence the difficulties with which the department had to contend were enormous. The thing is, were sufficient preparations made to deal with an epidemic of typhoid, which in every lengthened campaign invariably proves more deadly than bullets? When no expense is spared to secure the latest inventions of science in order to minimise our losses in battle, the same spirit should be shown in minimising our losses by disease. We are not at all satisfied that all is as it should be in regard to the medical arrangements of our Army, and the letters addressed to us by officers at the front, call attention to one blot which ought to be removed at once in the interests of humanity, and that is the unfortunate feeling existing with regard to the medical officers of the Army, not at the War Office, but in the Service Clubs. This cannot but be most injurious to the Army in every way.

Mr. Balfour has not yet been able to make any announcement with regard to the two additional members he has promised to nominate for the Commission that is to inquire into the hospital arrangements in South Africa. His task will scarcely be lightened by the attempt that has been made during the past week to asperse the impartiality of one of the gentlemen who have already consented to sit on the Commission. Because Professor Cunningham happens to be connected with the Medical Examination Department we quite fail to see why he is not qualified to assist in the inquiry, even though that inquiry may reflect on the Army Medical Department. It is absurd, as Mr. Balfour said, to suggest that because a man examined the figures of certain candidates he would be influenced in his action on the Commission in any way. To hint that Dr. Cunningham might be coerced by prospect of future reprisals is an insult to him and to the War Office. We sincerely hope that Professor Cunningham will not be induced to withdraw his services in consequence of the attacks made upon him.

We are not much in sympathy with the point raised by Lord Lichfield in the House of Lords on Tuesday night with regard to the operation of the Military Manœuvres Bill. The Bill proposes to give the War Office compulsory powers to use certain portions of land for a few days in the year for the purpose of carrying on military manœuvres. Lord Lichfield seemed to suggest that most of the owners of the land would object to such use being made of their land; but in this he was not borne out by Lord Lansdowne, who showed that the Bill contains a compensation clause which has been drawn up in a most liberal manner. It might perhaps be permissible to point out to Lord Lichfield, and other landlords affected, that even private rights must sometimes be sacrificed to public interest. Lord Lansdowne did not exaggerate facts when he said that in no other country in Europe are private rights allowed to prevail to the detriment of the Army. Yet we wonder how it comes about that there are so many "regrettable incidents" heard of in South Africa.

Lord Lansdowne announced in the House of Lords two or three weeks ago that it had been decided to devote a further sum of £100,000 for the provision of rifle ranges for Volunteer corps. The £40,000 voted for the purpose last year had proved entirely insufficient, and the War Office has now come to the conclusion that even the additional £100,000 which it proposes will not be enough to place ranges within reasonable reach of the different corps spread over the country. The Secretary of State for War stated in the Upper House on Tuesday that it had been decided to make the amount £130,000 instead of £100,000. An erroneous impression has grown up in some quarters that the War Office, in allocating grants, waited for applications from the different corps, and made selection among the more clamorous of their number. Lord Lansdowne took occasion to explain what was really being done. The general officers of districts are to send round to all the corps inspectors of musketry who will make reports on their range accommodation. The grants will be based on these reports without reference to whether the corps had made application or not. This is the only fair way of making grants, and will, we think, commend itself to all concerned.

The War Office, it is satisfactory to note, is concerned for the spiritual welfare of the Volunteers as well as for their efficiency as a fighting force. In reply to a question put to him on the subject in the House of Commons, Mr.

Wyndham stated that it had been decided to authorize the officer commanding a Volunteer brigade camp, where no Army chaplain or acting Army chaplain is stationed, to appoint a brigade chaplain. The officer commanding will also be empowered to appoint a second brigade chaplain for the denomination next most numerous to that of the chaplain, and the Volunteer chaplains, however, will not be granted continuous pay at Army rates, their duties differing so greatly in amount and variety from those of an Army chaplain that there is really no ground for granting them such pay, their services, as Mr. Wyndham pointed out, being only required on Sunday.

The Military Manœuvres Bill, which seemed to have passed the House of Lords without challenge, came on Monday before Mr. Campion, one of the Examiners of the House of Commons sitting to consider Standing Order Proofs. The Bill, though promoted by the Government, comes forward as a private measure, and will enable the military authorities to take lands in all parts of the Kingdom for certain periods for military manœuvres. Opposition was raised before the Examiner by the Earl of Lichfield, whose property at Cannock Chase will be affected, and by other owners of property in the New Forest and Dartmoor, on the ground that the rules of Parliament had not been complied with. The alleged breach was in neglecting to give the necessary notices to the owners and occupiers of property affected. The promoters contended that the Bill being of a public nature and of urgent public necessity, the usual notices as in the case of private Bills were not required. The Examiner held that the notices ought certainly to have appeared in the London Gazette, though it might not have been necessary to have published them in local papers. He found that the Standing Orders had not been complied with, and will report accordingly to the House. The Standing Orders Committee will in due course sit to consider the report, and will decide whether or not the Standing Orders shall be dispensed with. It will in all probability recommend that the Standing Orders be suspended, but the motion to that effect will not be allowed to pass without discussion. It is very rarely indeed that a Government measure is "tripped up" on a technical point like this.

"God-speed and safe return," her Majesty's message to the reinforcements of the C.I.V., who embarked for South Africa on Thursday, was conveyed by the Lord Mayor at the supper given to the men at the Mansion House on Wednesday night. The Lord Mayor, addressing the men, reminded them that on January 19, when their comrades had been present, he had told them that their regiment had no history—no traditions. That was only a few weeks ago. But a history has since been made for the corps by those in the field. Led by Colonel Mackinnon, Colonel Cholmondeley, and Lord Albemarle, they have achieved a reputation of which they may well be proud. The infantry, according to Lord Roberts' last report, marched something like 550 miles in some forty-two days, and during that time fought in twenty-six engagements, in all of which they have borne themselves well, being in the thick of the fighting on most occasions. This is a record of which any military body might well feel proud.

The Volunteers Bill, having passed through all its stages in the House of Lords, will shortly come up for consideration in the Lower Chamber. Mr. Arnold Foster will most probably move rejection of the measure, and as the Service members themselves are divided in their attitude towards it, an interesting discussion may be expected.

Senior Majors of embodied Militia who have been doing the same work as seconds in command in Line Battalions are at last to have justice done to them in the matter of pay. It was certainly an anomaly that they should be doing such work and yet should not receive the extra pay given to the seconds in command of Line Battalions. The War Office has now decided to give them the additional shilling, such addition to take date from the beginning of the period of embodiment.

As we go to press we learn that the 1st Batn. Scottish Rifles, 2nd Batn. Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers, 1st Batn. Black Watch, and 1st Batn. Shropshire Light Infantry, now in India, has been placed under orders of readiness to proceed to China.

Under existing regulations, an officer of Militia who, on retiring from the Line, elects to commute his retired pay for a gratuity has no deduction made from his gratuity during embodiment, whereas an officer who elects not to commute his retired pay has the whole of it stopped during embodiment. Similarly, an officer in receipt of retired pay who is now serving in a Royal Reserve regiment receives his pay while so serving, whereas an officer now serving in the Militia has his retired pay stopped. Mr. Griffith Boscawen himself a Militia officer, is endeavouring to convince the War Office of the desirability of removing these differences, and he is to put a question in the House of Commons in the hope of eliciting a statement as to the steps which the Department propose to take.

THE regimental headquarters of the Foot Guards are about to be removed from the Horse Guards building in Whitehall to Wellington Barracks.

THE Belfast Water Commissioners have petitioned against the Bill for the acquisition of some 25,000 acres in the Mourne mountains as a military manœuvring ground.

THE subject for the next essay of the United Service Institution of India will be "The Practical Training of British and Native Troops in India, with reference to the lessons of war in South Africa."

BELTUBBET, Portumna, Roscrea, Ballinrobe, and Banagher, and other small stations in Ireland which have been unoccupied for several years, are being renovated with a view to their being again used as military quarters.

THE 1st and 2nd Batns. Royal Home Counties Reserve Regt. at Aldershot, were supplied on Thursday with the new pattern sun hats promised by the War Office. They are of khaki canvas, with a broad quilted-stiffened brim, the head portion being gauzelined and perforated in the sides for ventilation.

THE recent address of Col. Sir Howard Vincent, M.P., at the Royal United Service Institution upon "The Lessons of the War," as read by him with the Armies in South Africa, has been reprinted by special request, and brought up to date. It is obtainable of the National Union, St. Stephen's Chambers, Westminster.

LORD WOLSELEY had decided that steps must be taken at once to instruct the infantry soldier in entrenching, and with this object 25 heavy picks and 25 spades or shovels are to be issued to each battalion of Regulars, Militia, and Volunteers. These tools are not at present to be considered as forming part of the equipment of battalions, but are to be demanded by units when required and returned to store when done with. The issues to Volunteers will be for the period of encampment only. The question of a course of instruction is now being gone into.

CHOLERA IN INDIA.—Cholera in a severe epidemic form has appeared at Kohat, where all the units of the native garrison have been attacked. Two hundred and seven cases, with 77 deaths, among the Sepoys and camp followers, occurred between the 3rd and 9th inst. The 19th Punjab Infantry lost 15 men. The regiments were moved on Monday last into camp. The 1st Sikhs fortunately had left for China before the outbreak of the epidemic.

ARMY AND VOLUNTEERS.—Two important alterations in the regulations affecting Volunteers have just been made. It has been decided, first, that an officer joining a Volunteer corps after retiring from the Army shall not be debarred from receiving out-fit allowance on rejoining the regular Army; and, secondly, that a Volunteer officer commissioned in the regular Army shall not be made to refund the outfit allowance which he received on joining the Volunteers. An official notification to this effect has reached Lieut.-Col. Pryce-Jones, who recently drew attention to the subject in the House of Commons.

Col. E. Roberts, Army Pay Dept.

Lieut.-Col. B. B. Connolly, late Army Medical Staff.

The Princess of Wales paid on Monday a second visit of inspection to the hospital ship named after her, and which returned to Southampton on Saturday with invalids from South Africa. Her Royal Highness, who alighted from the train at 2 o'clock, was accompanied by Princess Victoria of Wales, and attended by Miss Knollys, Sir Stanley Clarke, and Sir Dighton Probyn, and was received by Lieut.-Gen. Sir Baker Russell, commanding the Southern District, and his staff. Her Royal Highness was conducted by Colonel Stacpole, the embarkation officer, from the train to the ship, where Major Morgan, R.A.M.C., and the nursing sisters were presented. The visit lasted an hour and a half. The Princess had previously sent presents in the form of shirts, pocket-handkerchiefs, and socks, and on Monday her Royal Highness added to her former kindness by presenting each man with a neat red cushion, bearing the words in the corner, "A present from the Princess of Wales." Each man was also presented with a hymn-book, and the non-commissioned officers and Colonial troops received a New Testament. The volumes were in white covers with red edges, the top of the cover being inscribed "The Soldier's New Testament," and the bottom, "South Africa, 1900." The centre of the cover showed a blending of the Royal Standard, Union Jack, and Red Cross flag. Each man was spoken to in turn. On completing her tour of the vessel the Princess expressed her entire satisfaction with the arrangements for the care of the invalids, and then the convalescents mustered on the upper deck, where they cheered her Royal Highness with great enthusiasm.

The Duke of Connaught, accompanied by the Duchess, arrived in Dublin on Tuesday morning and resumed command of the troops in Ireland.

Princess Henry of Battenberg will inspect the Hampshire and Isle of Wight Artillery at Sandown on the 27th inst., and will afterwards be present at a garden party given by the officers.

General Sir Robert Biddulph, R.A., the retiring Governor and the Commander-in-Chief of Gibraltar, left for England on Thursday. He embarked in the Royal Garrison Artillery boat, which was rowed to the mail steamship by officers of the Royal Garrison Artillery, and was escorted by the boats of the Calpe Rowing Club. During General Biddulph's tenure of office, extending over six years, important works have been carried out, including sewage works, the commercial mole, the electric lighting of the town, and the general rearmament of the fortress with modern guns. His tenure of office has thus been most eventful.

Lieut.-General Sir George White arrived at Gibraltar on Tuesday from England, to take over his duties as Governor and Commander-in-Chief. The town was en fête, and was decorated with flags and designs bearing the inscription "Welcome to the hero of Ladysmith," and the ships in the harbour were dressed with bunting. The vast concourse of people which thronged the streets gave the General a most enthusiastic reception. Addresses of welcome were presented by the local Chamber of Commerce and other representative bodies. The town was illuminated at night.

Lieut.-General Lord William Seymour, commanding the forces in British North America, left Halifax, Nova Scotia, for London on Monday, via New York. Before his departure he issued orders highly commending both the Canadian soldiers and the British Regulars for their work in the recent mobilisation at Halifax.

Major-General E. L. Elliot, Inspector-General of Cavalry in India, has filed a specification of an invention relating to improvements in saddles for military purposes.
